No one can charge bad faith because, when urged to accept an amendment agreeing not to come to this Congress for further appropriations, with the assurance that in that event opposition would be withdrawn, the proposition was declined. At that time the gentleman from Maine who was opposing the bill stated that without that amendment the camel would have his head in the tent and at the next session his body would follow.

There is an almost unanimous sentiment among the people for this appropriation. The States whose legislatures have met since the authorization by Congress have, almost without exception, made appropriations for participation. The papers and magazines all over the country have urged it, and I believe if an opportunity is given this House to vote upon it, that the majority for the bill will be large and decisive.

And now, Mr. Chairman, for the final reason. Can we, in honor and with credit, turn down this bill? The Congress of the United States, by the act of March 3, 1905, invited the nations of the world to participate with us in this celebration to be held near and in the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia. We can not now evade the responsibility of our own act. The powers will be our guests. If they are coming in greater numbers than we expected, then we must enlarge our table and provide in greater abundance. Whether we intended to do more, when the act of last winter was passed, is not now the question. The invitations have been sent and accepted. The guests are almost on the way. Shall we repeal the former law, withdraw the invitations, throw discredit upon our hospitality, or shall we meet the occasion with that spirit of liberality and greatness which is truly American?

I have no fears of what will be the verdict of the Representatives of the American people if given a chance to vote on this measure. It will be a hearty response and notice that America, in hospitality as well as greatness of achievement, leads the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DAM ACROSS THE PEND D'OREILLE RIVER, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, from the Speaker's table, the bill (S. 6038) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes, a similar House bill being on the Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 6038) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to, and it shall be lawful for, the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River at a point at or about the Big Falls (sometimes known as Metaline Falls) on the Pend d'Oreille River, in the county of Stevens, State of Washington, such point to be selected by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, its successors or assigns, at said falls, or within 1,000 feet above or below the same, for the purpose of erecting, operating, and maintaining a power station, and to maintain inlet and outlet races or canals, and to make such other improvements as may be necessary for the development of water power, electrical power, and the transmission of the same, subject always to the provisions and requirements of this act and to such conditions and stipulations as may be imposed by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States: Provided, That such dam and works shall not be built or commenced until after the plans and specifications for their construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed locations as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, or until after he shall have approved such plan and specifications and the location of such dams and accessory works; when the plans for any dam to be constructed under the provisions of this act have been approved by the Secretary of War it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans, either before or after the completion of the structure, unless the modification of such plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That the Government of the United States reserves the right at any time that the improvement of the navigation of the Pend d'Oreille River demands it to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam or other works built under the provisions of this act, suitable lock or locks or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control such dam or dams or other structures, and the level of the pool caused by such dam or dams, to such an extent as may be necessary to provide facilities for navigation; and whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of such lock or other structures, the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, its successors or assigns, owning and controlling such dam or other structures, shall convey to the United States, under such terms as Congress shall prescribe, titles to such lands as may be required for such lock and approaches, and in addition thereto shall grant to the United States free of cost the free use of water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided, That the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, its successors or assigns, building, maintaining, or operating any dam or other structures under the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise, in a court of competent jurisdiction. The Pend d'Oreille Development Company, its successors or assigns, owning or operating any such dam, shall maintain at their own expense such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways and such ways for the free passage of saw logs as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void unless the dam herein authorized shall be commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of the approval hereof.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill H. R. 18963, being a similar House bill, lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Erie County Humane Society, of Sandusky, and of C. V. Hoke, of Van Wert, in the State of Ohio, and of S. H. Cowan, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the extension of time in the interstate transportation of live stock; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens and manufacturing companies of Kings Mills, Harshman, Cleveland, Tiffin, Bellevue, Middletown, Toledo, Warren, Fremont, Upper Sandusky, Mantua, Beidler, Ashland, Salem, New Carlisle, Ashville, Mansfield, Dayton, Portsmouth, Grove City, Columbus, Cincinnati, Springfield, Rome, Canton, Akron, Oberlin, Findlay, Defiance, Massillon, Roxabell, and Chandlersville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry business associations of Dayton, Urbana, Chillicothe, Oxford, Cleveland, Marion, Louisville, Ashley, Waynesfield, Akron, Columbus, and Xenia, all in the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels post and post check bills;" which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Canton, East Liverpool, Good Hope, Mansfield, Galion, Ravenna, Perry, Salineville, Attica, Cincinnati, Girard, Bellaire, Marietta, Gallipolis, Palestine, Columbus, Circleville, Troy, Fidelity, Toledo, West Chester, Springfield, Newtown, South Lebanon, Perry, and Newport, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry women's clubs of Toledo, London, and Warren, all in the State of Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made for a scientific investigation into the industrial conditions of women in the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of sundry church organizations of Milan, Oxford, Springfield, Portsmouth, Reiley, Marion, and Barnesville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation granting relief to the shipkeepers at the Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McCREARY. I present a number of petitions signed by over 6,000 persons residing in the cities of Louisville, Covington, Lexington, and other parts of Kentucky, praying for the restriction of immigration. I ask unanimous consent that the heading of one petition may be read, with the accompanying letter, which is very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Whereas the daily press reports show that large hordes of undesirable immigrants are landing upon our shores, and that the number is increasing to an alarming extent, and that they are no longer of the class that have made our beloved country, but of such who are not congenial to our ideas of free American government.

Believing that our fair southland is ever ready to extend a welcome to all desirable immigrants and that it has already racial problems of such gravity that to extend open doors to the scum of the European countries would prove a great detriment; believing that proper safeguards should be placed around the reception of the undesirable class, we, the undersigned, having the welfare of the country, especially of the State of Kentucky and the South, at heart, hereby issue this petition for signatures, and all parties thus designated may consider themselves authorized, under this call, to aid in the furtherance of this object, to protect our State, the South, and the country from undesirable immigration, and ask that all those in authority may assist us in making necessary laws that will restrict immigration to those who will prove a blessing and not a curse.

Respectfully,

COMMITTEE OF RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION IN KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 24, 1905.

Know all men by these presents that the following signatures to the above petition have been received, and of which these names are a copy and on file at the office of John H. Duesing, secretary of the committee on restriction of immigration of the State council of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, 1526 Maple street, Louisville, Ky.

These signatures have been secured through the efforts of the members of the order in the State, which alone has a membership of over 8,000. These names are not altogether composed of the membership, but hundreds of others, who believe as they do.

Hoping you will give this matter your earnest attention and assist in securing the proper legislation to quarantine the landing on our shores of a class of people who will prove a detriment and not a help to our American institutions,

JOHN H. DUESING, Secretary.

Witness, attest, and seal.

[SEAL.] CHARLES HOEFFLIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will lie on the table.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back with amendments the bill (S. 43) to extend the lines of the Capital Traction Company, and I submit a report thereon. I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

I desire to give notice that, owing to the immediate pressing necessity for the passage of the bill at an early date, I shall undertake to call it up in the Senate on Friday or Saturday of this week if I can get the right of way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], I understand, this morning reported a bill from the Committee on the District of Columbia relating to the extension of street railway lines to the Union Station. I want to state that the bill is not a unanimous report, but the report of a bare majority of that committee. I wish further to state, Mr. President, that as interests which are entitled to consideration have asked for a hearing on the bill, which they have not had, I shall move to-morrow to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia for further consideration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2668) to regulate the retirement of certain veterans of the civil war, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 10th instant, proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 for the purchase of ground and the erection of buildings for consular offices in China, Korea, and Japan, etc., intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. KNOX on the 22d instant, proposing to increase the salary of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from the United States to Turkey from $10,000 to $17,500 per annum, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BURKETT on the 26th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving Massachusetts avenue from a point adjacent to the Naval Observatory to the District of Columbia line northwest, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, submitted a report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6229) to authorize the sale of public lands for cemetery purposes, reported it with an amendment.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. MILLARD. From the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I ask that an order be made for reprinting 500 copies of Senate bill 6191 and the accompanying report.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 500 additional copies of S. 6191 to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction, and of the Report No. 3626 on said bill, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 6250) granting a pension to Alice G. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 6251) to authorize the Court of Claims to admit as evidence affidavits in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 6255) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 6256) to authorize the Lake Schutte Cemetery Corporation to convey lands heretofore granted to it; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 6257) granting an increase of pension to Jonas M. Sees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6258) granting an increase of pension to John S. Saunders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6259) granting an increase of pension to Oakley Randall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6260) for the relief of the estate of George W. Bromley, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GEARIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 to adjust the claims of the settlers commonly called the "Sherman County settlers" on the lands situated in Sherman and adjacent counties in the State of Oregon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment relative to the pay and allowances of chaplains in the Navy, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,880, to be paid by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from the appropriation for the water department, District of Columbia, extension of the high-service system, to the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator, as the bill is now being considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, it had better go direct to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLATT. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $35,000 for the reclamation of that portion of the naval station at Honolulu, Hawaii, known as the "Reef," etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the maintenance of the naval training station at St. Helena, Va., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $140,000 for the construction of a new brass and iron foundry at the navy-yard, Washington, D. C., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $261,075 for the construction of a brass and iron foundry at the New York Navy-Yard, N. Y., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19432) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH SIERRA.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 350) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the morning business closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has closed, but the Chair will receive further morning business.

MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance, I report a joint resolution with reference to the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal, and in view of the importance of the subject I will ask for its present consideration.

It is in answer to a message of the President in regard to the purchase of two steel dredges for the canal. It announces what the committee thinks should be the policy of the Government in this regard, and it is important in view of public interests that it should be acted upon as promptly as possible. I ask that the joint resolution be read, and then I will ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to have the joint resolution read again.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. MORGAN. Is this a report from a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a report from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just read?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I do not want to object, but I think the chairman of the committee ought to state to the Senate the occasion for this somewhat unusual bill and why the haste.

Mr. ALDRICH. The President of the United States, in a message sent to the Senate three or four days ago, called attention to the fact that there was in contemplation the purchase of two steel dredges, for which bids have been received from manufacturers in this country and in Scotland, and the question as to the policy of the Government in this connection was a matter which he submitted to Congress. The Committee on Finance are of opinion that this purchase should be made in the United States where the bids or tenders are not unreasonable or extortionate, and it is important that the executive department should know at once what is the opinion and desire of Congress in the matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Can the Senator from Rhode Island inform the Senate what the difference is in the bids for these dredges?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me, I will answer that question in this way: While our tariff duties would impose from 40 to 50 per cent on imported articles of this kind, the difference in the bids between the Maryland Steel Company and the foreign corporation was about 10 per cent.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is, the foreign product after paying the tariff duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; they are not required to pay tariff duty.

Mr. PATTERSON. They are not required to pay tariff duty?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the bid from the foreign country is 10 per cent lower than the American.

Mr. GALLINGER. About 10 per cent lower than the bid of the Maryland Steel Company.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is there any competition in the United States for the particular article that is in controversy?

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess I can not answer that; but it was open to all bidders. I do not know how many bids were received. I know the Maryland Steel Company was the lowest bidder.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have here a statement of the bids actually made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there were several bids.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to ask the Senator from Colorado if he desires to have the actual figures read?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not see why the joint resolution should not be printed and go over until to-morrow. There is no great haste about it, is there?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is this haste about it: The Department have to decide very promptly as to these steel dredges in order that they may be ordered and constructed. They are very important in the prosecution of the work. If the senior Senator from Colorado desires, I have no objection to the joint resolution going over until to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. I think it had better go over. Some Senators around me say that they would like to look at it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] were present when the matter was discussed generally. When the form of the resolution was agreed upon neither of those Senators was present. The Senator from Texas expressed himself that if we were going to provide that citizens of the United States should pay duties upon imported material, he thought the Government ought not to treat themselves any better than they treat citizens. I do not know what the opinion of the Senator from Colorado is on that point.

Mr. TELLER. I was not present this morning at the meeting of the Committee on Finance because I was engaged on another committee. I understand that the difference between the American bid, which is made by some Baltimore or Maryland people, and the bid made by the foreigners, Scotchmen, I think, and the whole of this matter is shown in a message which the President sent to us some days ago; and if Senators will care to do so, by to-morrow morning they can acquaint themselves with the facts.

Mr. HALE. Let it all go over.

Mr. TELLER. Seventy thousand dollars is the difference, as I recollect.

Mr. ALDRICH. The foreign bid was $654,000 and the bid of the Maryland Steel Company was $724,000. There was another bid, a Dutch bid, of $852,000, about $100,000 more.

Mr. TELLER. Our bid is considerably less, but then, when you add the amount of things that had to be added, it makes the difference somewhere between $70,000 and $100,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. A difference of about $70,000.

Mr. TELLER. On these two steel dredges.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are some other considerations affecting the question aside from the price. The main consideration was the price, and the difference was about $70,000, or about 10 per cent of the entire contract.

Mr. TELLER. If the joint resolution goes over until to-morrow, I think Senators can be prepared, by getting the President's message, to consider it.

I simply wish to say for myself now that whenever the American tariff raises the price of goods to all American citizens, in my judgment, it would be a very singular spectacle when the Government of the United States wanted to use it to insist upon buying in a foreign country to escape the difference between the American price and the foreign price, which is probably the result of the American tariff.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Before we pass from this subject, I wish to state one question which I think it is important to bring out.

There were two foreign bids, one from Scotland, which amounted in round numbers to $654,000; there was the Maryland bid, which was about $724,000; and there was a Dutch bid, from Holland, of $850,000. I think it is important to show, and it should be understood, that the American bid was a fair, average bid, and it was $100,000 below one of the foreign bids.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida rose to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. MORGAN subsequently said: I offer an amendment by way of a substitute for the joint resolution reported by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] this morning from the Committee on Finance. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH SIERRA.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 350) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to J. W. Hargis, Mary Hargis, Mrs. Belle McConnoughy, Mrs. Kate Anderson, Modeste Hargis, Mrs. Virginia Craig, Petronilla Leonard, Steven Leonard, and Joseph Sierra, heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased, late collector of customs at Pensacola, Fla., $3,679.19.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Before yielding to Senators for the consideration of private bills, I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens in the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER].

MAJ. SEYMOUR HOWELL.

Mr. ALGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5675) for the relief of Maj. Seymour Howell, United States Army, retired.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Seymour Howell, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States in liquidation of a deficiency in his accounts as paymaster at Manila, P. I., caused by robbery committed in March, 1900, by some person or people unknown while he was in the field paying five regiments of infantry, two troops of cavalry, thirty-eight detachments, and sick men in various hospitals scattered over the island of Luzon.

Mr. SPOONER. What committee is the bill reported from?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it accompanied by a written report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is accompanied by a written report made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18328) to regulate the practice in certain civil and criminal cases in the western district of Arkansas, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported by the Senator from Texas be put on its passage. It relates to a local matter in Arkansas, and I should like very much to have it passed at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MASONIC MUTUAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5561) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association, of the District of Columbia,'" approved February 5, 1901.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. FRYE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15332) to incorporate the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he strike out the words "to be located." They are not necessary; they are not usual, and they may lead to a misconstruction. It is sufficient to say a corporation in the District of Columbia. That shows that it is a corporation the home of which is in the District.

Mr. FRYE. This is a House bill. Is it worth while to make the amendment?

Mr. BACON. I suppose there will be no trouble about concurrence, and really this matter of corporations ought to be very carefully guarded to see that they are kept within proper limits. It is outside of our ordinary function anyhow.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. BACON. To strike out the words "to be located," on page 3, line 2. I would not suggest it, but I think it is better that we should have uniformity in these matters of incorporation.

Mr. FRYE. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. BACON. I think it better that it should be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, strike out the words "to be located."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA A. JOHNSON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of a pension bill which was inadvertently laid aside months ago. It is the bill (S. 1570) granting an increase of pension to Lydia A. Johnson.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Lydia A. Johnson, widow of William L. Johnson, late of Company G, Twelfth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk an amendment which I propose to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina is not now in order under the unanimous-consent agreement, as the pending amendment is section 26, reported by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After that is disposed of the Chair will recognize the Senator from North Carolina. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Immigration as section 26 as amended.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to the chairman that that amendment ought to have some limitation in it. It now provides:

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary.

It seems to me that there ought to be some limitation. As it now stands the whole fund could be expended for clerks and on this division for making exhibits, and it appears to me that we ought to have the amendment strictly limiting it as to the amount of money. I suggest an addition at the end.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending the discussion, I should like to hear the amendment read. I was not present when it was offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire requests that the amendment be read.

Mr. LODGE. It is the last amendment to the bill.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section at the end of the bill on page 18——

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not necessary to read it. I find it in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. At the end of the section on page 20, line 15, after the words "the expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund," I move to add the words "but shall not exceed $20,000 per year."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must have forgotten what is to be done by this division. This division is to "gather from all available sources"——

Mr. LODGE. I know.

Mr. KEAN. I am responsible for the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the sum shall not exceed $20,000 per year. I thought that was enough to begin with.

Mr. SPOONER. But the magnitude of this enterprise has not yet dawned on the Senator from New Jersey, or he would not have the temerity to suggest such a limitation.

Mr. HALE. What is the necessity for it at all?

Mr. SPOONER. That is a question I did not rise to answer.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can answer almost any question that is put to him. It is an enormous scheme that we are asked without any consideration to involve ourselves in.

Mr. SPOONER. See what this division is to do. I call the attention of the Senator to it. It is to—

Gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State—

I want the attention of the Senator from Maine, because he is interested in this—and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of land, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages—

That is, in each State and Territory—

the costs of living, and all other information that may tend to aid aliens in selecting a place of residence, and shall publish such information in different languages—

The Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Massachusetts ought to realize that they can not do all that with $20,000. It will cost that to gather this information—and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the same among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States, and to such other persons and societies as may desire the same.

Now, there is a provision here to which there could be no objection, I think:

When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States—the agent shall have the necessary and proper facilities for making known to immigrants the benefits to be obtained by settlement in the State represented by that agent. The States have their immigration bureaus and the States ought to advertise themselves, and if they have not energy enough to do it there ought not to be a bureau or division created for that purpose in one of the Departments at Washington, in my opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator from Wisconsin made his closing suggestion I was about to suggest the same thing, that if we should strike out the amendment down to the word "same," in line 22, page 19, and say that "When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it," etc. I think that would be a very wise provision.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will excuse me, I have an impression that there are many States—I think there are New England States—that would be glad to have the privilege of having an agent to represent the interests of the State, without expense to the Government, to exhibit to aliens who come here the benefits that might result from their going to those particular States. It is a scheme, it seems to me, that would tend to prevent their concentration in the great cities, which, after all, to my mind, is the most important thing to be accomplished so far as the army of immigrants are concerned who come to our shores. I should hope that that part of the amendment at least should be retained in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator move to strike out all that portion of the amendment before the word "when," in line 22, page 19?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will make that motion, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator does not make that motion it will be made by some other Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will make it and I will also move to strike out the closing sentence:

> The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

I would leave the States to pay whatever expense there may be in connection with the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 26 down to and including the word "same," line 22, and at the end of the proposed amendment strike out the words "The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund."

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I understood that he proposed to amend the amendment by limiting the amount to $20,000.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw it because my amendment would have no meaning if the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] should prevail.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I understood that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts was the first amendment offered, and I supposed it would be in order, as there has been no action taken on the other amendment. I renew the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment is not now in order, there being an amendment to an amendment pending.

Mr. McCREARY. I simply renew the amendment so that I may have it before the Senate.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the motion that has been made to strike out the best part of the amendment which was reported unanimously by the Committee on Immigration. As I understand it, a motion is made to strike out these words:

> Authority is hereby given the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and said division shall gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of land, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages, the costs of living, and all other information that may tend to aid aliens in selecting a place of residence, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the same.

Mr. President, it would not cost much for the Commissioner-General of Immigration to acquire this information, and it is information which is much needed. Immigrants now come to a few ports. Perhaps half of them came last year, aggregating nearly half a million, through Ellis Island at the city of New York. The object of this amendment is to bring before the minds of the immigrants the attractions of the various States and Territories; to gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of land, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages, the costs of living, etc.

This is just the character of information that should be given to the immigrants who come to this country. We saw last year 285,000 immigrants locating in the State of New York, while but 684 located in Kentucky, and a less number in Georgia and Florida. The Southern States need desirable immigrants; they want desirable immigrants; and the object of this amendment, which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Immigration, is to lay before immigrants when they come to this country the attractions of the various States and Territories, so that they may not be collected in the cities and in a few States.

Another object of the amendment is to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories which desire immigrants. It is not proposed to send immigrants to States that do not want them; it is not proposed to use any undue influence with immigrants; it is only proposed to lay before them the attractions of the various States and Territories, to show them how they may get there, what it will cost to get there, and how they can make an honest living after they have arrived in the various States and Territories.

Mr. President, when we look at the Congressional Directory and see the list of the names of the commissioners who are now engaged in assisting the Commissioner-General of Immigration at various points, what do we find? We find that to-day there is a commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, New York, one at Boston, one at Philadelphia, one at Baltimore, one at San Francisco, and, so far as the Congressional Directory shows, there is not one on the southern coast.

How do we propose to bring before the immigrants who come to this country the attractions, the desire for labor, and the wages they may obtain unless we adopt the plan set forth in this amendment? Steamships that have been bringing immigrants to our country have been bringing them to the ports which I have named, and there seems to have been no effort whatever to bring immigrants to the Southern States. The object of the amendment is to distribute immigrants. When the cost is so small, when the number of immigrants coming to this country is so rapidly increasing, when we see, as I said before, 285,000 immigrants locating in New York and only 684 locating in Kentucky, and a less number in some of the other Southern States, it seems to me the immigration law ought to be so broadened as to bring before the minds of immigrants when they come to this country the fact that there are other States besides New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and New Jersey. I say that the time has come when there ought to be one commissioner of immigration, at least, in the Southern States, for, if the list in the Congressional Directory is correct, there is not to-day a solitary commissioner of immigration at any southern port. They are all at northern ports.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will not be mutilated in the way which is proposed, by striking out that part of it which directs the Commissioner-General to get the information which is so much needed by immigrants when they come here, information which is valuable to them and valuable to the people of the South, because it will help to attract immigrants to the Southern States.

I can not see why we should deny this small sum, which can be so beneficially used for the Southern States; and yet I have understood some Senator would make a motion to strike out the two last lines of the amendment, which read:

> The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

What is the "immigrant fund" for, if it is not to be used for the purpose of paying expenses connected with immigration? We have an immigration fund, I understand, of between three and four million dollars. I have been told that last year there was collected at least $2,000,000 on the 1,226,000 immigrants who came to this country. At $2 a head that would amount to over $2,000,000, and this pending bill proposes—and I am for it—to increase the head tax from $2 to $5, which will give us $5,000,000 in one year if we have the same number of immigrants come to this country next year as came last year, and the Commissioner-General of Immigration says he believes there will be an increase.

What is that immigrant fund to be used for, unless it is to be used for the purpose of making it easier for the immigrants who arrive here, to give them a better place to go when they first get here, to give them better treatment, and furnish them better facilities to find the best place to go? We do not take the money out of the Treasury; we simply take part of the immigrant fund to do this.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have not a word to say in reply to the sectional suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. He must know, I think, that I would not think of that for a moment in any suggestion I have to make upon this amendment, nor do I think there is a member of this body who would. The Commissioner-General of Immigration, as I understand, recommends the portion of this amendment which begins in line 22, on page 19, which involves the maintenance of display stations and representatives and agents of the States desiring to promote immigration within their borders and every possible facility to acquaint immigrants with the advantages that are to be derived; but I believe the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, and especially advocated by him, is absolutely impracticable. I hardly think the Department should be turned into an immigration agent for any State in the Union. Almost inevitably, Mr. President, the documents indicated in this amendment which would embody the information from the different States and Territories of the United States, and to be distributed among the immigrants, being all compiled and drawn up here in one of the bureaus, would be entirely unsatisfactory to a great many of the States. The States know how to advertise their own resources better than any official in Washington does.

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MCCREARY. I do not understand that this amendment proposes to make the Commissioner-General of Immigration any more an immigration agent than he now is.

Mr. SPOONER. He is an immigration agent for the purpose of administering the immigration law and protecting, by rigid inspection and thorough administration of the laws of the United States, this country from undesirable immigrants. He is not, however, a State immigration agent.

Mr. MCCREARY. It seems to me that to properly carry out his duties he should be authorized by law to present to immigrants, when they come here, the attractions of the various States, and to present to them also what it will cost to go to the various States, what the climate is, what the rate of wages may be, etc. That will not cost much.

Mr. SPOONER. There is not a man living who could write an article on the attractions of Kentucky in all of the aspects mentioned in this amendment, other than a Kentuckian, which would be at all satisfactory to explain the beauties and advantages of Kentucky.

Mr. MCCREARY. If the Senator will permit me, the amendment says:

> Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories—in order to obtain this information, and the States will furnish the information to the Commissioner-General of Immigration. That is what the amendment provides. He does not have to go to collect it himself, but he corresponds with the proper officials of the States and Territories, and gathers from them descriptions of those attractions to which I have referred.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not so read the bill. The bill makes it the duty of the Commissioner-General to—

> Gather from all available sources useful information regarding the resources, products, and physical characteristics of each State and Territory, the character of the climate and soil, the prices of land, the routes of travel and cost of transportation, the opportunities of employment in skilled and unskilled occupations, the prevailing rates of wages, the costs of living, and all other information that may tend to aid aliens in selecting a place of residence, and shall publish such information in different languages and distribute the same among all admitted aliens at the immigrant stations of the United States, and to such other persons and societies as may desire the same.

Mr. MCCREARY. But, if the Senator will permit me, he overlooks the earlier part of the clause beginning in line 9, which reads:

> Correspondence shall be had with the proper officials of the States and Territories, etc.

Mr. SPOONER. That is one.

Mr. MCCREARY. It continues—> and such division shall gather from all available sources useful information, etc.

I can come to no other conclusion, except that the Commissioner-General is to correspond with the proper officials of the States and Territories and gather this information.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is not the only limit. This duty, in very general language, is imposed upon the division; and it is a very great work if honestly and properly done. Of course, we ought not to begin the publication of these papers until they have completed the work; otherwise they would be advertising one State or two States or three States, instead of all the States and Territories.

Mr. President, 97½ per cent of the immigrants who arrived at Ellis Island last year, we were told yesterday, came here with definite addresses, and 65 per cent of them with transportation. They knew when they started from home what their destination in the United States was to be. What does this provision mean that the United States shall have an agent at the immigrant stations, whose duty it shall be to distribute this information? Suppose that is all done. He meets the immigrants—men, women, and children—as they come off the ship, or as they come off of the island, and distributes the circulars. He must do it impartially to each one of them—forty-seven or forty-eight circulars, adequately advertising each State and Territory—so as thereby to induce immigration to the State which, after reading all these documents, the immigrant shall deem to be the most attractive. It seems altogether impracticable.

Mr. MCCREARY. Will the Senator let me ask him just one question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SPOONER. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCREARY. Would it satisfy the Senator from Wisconsin to say that correspondence shall be had with proper officials of the States and Territories, and they shall furnish such information with regard to the advantages of their State as they may deem proper?

Mr. SPOONER. That does not do away with the objection. The agent of the Department, of course, must distribute impartially the information. There are forty-five States, and I guess each State thinks it is a little bit better than any other State for desirable immigrants. There are several Territories, and so, as I said before, this agent of the Department will distribute in French and Spanish and all the languages represented by immigrants forty-eight pamphlets written by the authorities of the States, advertising the advantages of the States. Would that tend to promote immigration to the States? It would be utterly bewildering. If the States want to promote immigration they should have an agent constantly at those display stations; they should be represented at the stations which the Commissioner-General of Immigration recommends, and have object lessons there, and have some one there to explain orally, to answer questions, and to furnish information about the routes and represent adequately the advantages, each man of his own State or Territory.

Mr. President, I say again that while I believe these display stations may very well and wisely be erected and maintained, and while I believe that the representatives of the States, properly accredited, should be given every possible facility for the presentation to arriving immigrants of the advantages of climate, market for labor, cost of living, and everything in that way of the State which each represents, yet, if the State does not care enough for immigration to avail itself of the provision of this bill, which is unobjectionable and which is recommended by the Department, to have some one there to promote immigration within its borders, it has no right to complain that immigrants go elsewhere.

It is another little piece of paternalism, with which, really, the Government has nothing to do. It is no part of the business of a Government Department to be directing immigrants to this State or that State or the other. It is their business to see to it that the immigration laws are enforced and that undesirable people are not admitted to this country to remain.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator if he would recognize that that provision could be enlarged in some degree to meet the condition which I will speak of——

Mr. SPOONER. You mean the last one?

Mr. BACON. Yes. I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. BACON. We have in the Southern States movements on the part of large railroad systems to promote immigration. They do it for the purpose of developing the country through which their lines run, with the idea that in such development there will be increased business for their railroads. For instance, I know that the Southern Railroad and several other railroads have distinctively immigration bureaus, with their agents. They operate in the Northern States now, and to a large extent in the Northwestern States, which bring colonies of immigrants to settle up different localities. They have several considerable towns in my own State, one of them between five and ten thousand inhabitants, made up almost exclusively of immigrants who have been brought in through the agency of these railroad immigration bureaus.

It is more than probable that a more practical result is to be anticipated from an enterprise of that kind than there is from State action; and it is with a view of that that I suggest to the Senator that possibly—pretermitting for the present the question as to the elimination of the first part of the provision and limiting the consideration to the part which the Senator now approves—I want to suggest the propriety and advisability of enlarging that authority, so as not only to embrace agents of the States, but agents of immigration societies, whether they be the agents of corporations or of individual localities.

Mr. SPOONER. If that is limited so as to make it subject to regulations prescribed by the Department, so as to prevent interference with the Government business, I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. BACON. The reason I made the suggestion rather than offering an amendment is that I realize the fact that it ought to be carefully guarded, of course, if it is enlarged; and I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], if he approves of that, that there shall be incorporated some such provision, which, I think, is more important really, so far as my immediate locality is concerned, than a State agent would be.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me to make a report out of order.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17453) for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials, to report it with amendments.

The bill is an important one, and I ask that it be read as amended by the committee, and I also ask that the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue accompanying it may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after January 1, 1907, domestic alcohol of such degree of proof as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may be withdrawn from bond without the payment of internal-revenue tax, for use in the arts and industries, and for fuel, light, and power, provided said alcohol shall have been mixed in the presence and under the direction of an authorized Government officer, after withdrawal from the distillery warehouse, with methyl alcohol or other denaturing material or materials, or admixture of the same, suitable to the use for which the alcohol is withdrawn, but which destroys its character as a beverage and renders it unfit for liquid medicinal purposes; such denaturing to be done in a denaturing bonded warehouse specially designed or set aside for denaturing purposes only, and under conditions prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The character and quantity of the said denaturing material and the conditions upon which said alcohol may be withdrawn free of tax shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make all necessary regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Distillers, manufacturers, dealers, and all other persons furnishing, handling, or using alcohol withdrawn from bond under the provisions of this act shall keep such books and records, execute such bonds, and render such returns as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation require. Such books and records shall be open at all times to the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent.

SEC. 2. That any person who withdraws alcohol free of tax under the provisions of this act and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and who removes or conceals same, or is concerned in removing, depositing, or concealing same, for the purpose of preventing the same from being denatured under governmental supervision, and any person who uses alcohol withdrawn from bond under the provisions of section 1 of this act for manufacturing any beverage or liquid medicinal preparation, or knowingly sells any beverage or liquid medicinal preparation made in whole or in part from such alcohol, or knowingly violates any of the provisions of this act, or who shall recover or attempt to recover by redistillation or by any other process or means, any alcohol rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal purposes under the provisions of this act, or who knowingly uses, sells, conceals, or otherwise disposes of alcohol so recovered or redistilled, shall on conviction of each offense be fined not more than $5,000 or be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and shall, in addition, forfeit to the United States all personal property used in connection with his business, together with the buildings and lots or parcels of ground constituting the premises on which said unlawful acts are performed or permitted to be performed: Provided, That manufacturers employing processes in which alcohol, used free of tax under the provisions of this act, is expressed or evaporated from the articles manufactured, shall be permitted to recover such alcohol and to have such alcohol restored to a condition suitable solely for reuse in manufacturing processes under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

SEC. 3. That for the employment of such additional force of chemists, internal-revenue agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, laborers, and other assistants as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may deem proper and necessary to the prompt and efficient operation and enforcement of this law, and for the purchase of locks, seals, weighing beams, gauging instruments, and for all necessary expenses incident to the proper execution of this law, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said appropriation to be immediately available.

For a period of two years from and after the passage of this act the force authorized by this section of this act shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and without compliance with the conditions prescribed by the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service," approved January 16, 1883, and amendments thereof, and with such compensation as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may fix, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make full report to Congress at its next session of all appointments made under the provisions of this act and the compensation paid thereunder, and of all regulations prescribed under the provisions hereof, and shall further report what, if any, additional legislation is necessary, in his opinion, to fully safeguard the revenue and to secure a proper enforcement of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter sent to the desk by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 22, 1906.

Hon. NELSON W. ALDRICH,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

SIR: Replying to your question whether, if the Senate should substantially adopt the free-alcohol bill passed by the House of Representatives, in which bill the burden of prescribing all the rules and regulations under which the law shall become effective is placed upon the Treasury Department, it would be possible by the 1st of January, 1907, for the Department to be prepared to put the provisions of the bill into effect and operation, I have the honor to say that in my opinion the Department can make all the necessary rules and regulations, employ the needed additional force, and arrange for the necessary buildings for the conduct of the work by that date.

The reasons why I fixed the 1st of January, 1907, in the bill which I presented to the House committee were stated by me in the printed hearings before your committee.

Very respectfully, JOHN W. YERKES, Commissioner.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to give notice that at the earliest possible moment I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill. I ask that the bill may be printed specially, as there is a great demand for copies, and in order that it may be ready for distribution as early as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Rhode Island be willing to state very briefly the changes made in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. ALDRICH. I can do that to-morrow morning or I can do it now. The changes are very few.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is great interest manifested throughout the country in this proposed legislation, and I think if the Senator would do it briefly now it would be better.

Mr. ALDRICH. The only substantial changes are as to the time when the act shall go into effect and with reference to preventing frauds in its enforcement. There are no other changes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be specially printed, as requested by the Senator from Rhode Island, and be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6038) authorizing the construction of a dam across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington, by the Pend d'Oreille Development Company, for the development of water power, electrical power, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 17890. An act granting an increase of pension to J. T. Bandy; and

H. R. 18032. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Scott.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 19572) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17842) granting a pension to Josephine V. Sparks, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. DRAPER, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 9297. An act for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired;

H. R. 16307. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to have a survey made of unsurveyed public lands in the State of Louisiana; and

H. R. 18435. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to cooperate, through the Bureau of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, with the shellfish commissioners of the State of Maryland in making surveys of the natural oyster beds, bars, and rocks in the waters within the State of Maryland.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 19572) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is a bill only providing for certain emergencies, and needs to be passed at once without reference. I have consulted with members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask that it may be placed on its passage now. Let it be read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the credit of the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts, 1906," $60,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "Fees of witnesses, United States courts, 1905," and to the credit of the appropriation "Fees of jurors, United States courts, 1906," $30,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "Fees of jurors, United States courts, 1905."

To meet the expenses of opening to entry and settlement during the fiscal years 1906 and 1907 the ceded lands of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, under act of April 23, 1904; the Crow Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, under act of April 27, 1904; the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, under act of December 21, 1904; the Shoshone Indian Reservation in the State of Wyoming, under act of March 3, 1905, and such other Indian reservations that may be open to entry and settlement during the fiscal year 1907, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to continue available during the fiscal year 1907: Provided, That the expenses pertaining to the opening of each of said reservations and paid for out of this appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States from the money received from the sale of the lands embraced in said reservations, respectively: Provided further, That clerks detailed to assist in the opening of said reservations, while on such duty, shall be allowed per diem, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4403) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, without intending to delay the passage of this measure in the least, I desire to say a few words in reference to the amendment under consideration. I regard it as one of the most important features of the bill. We are not only interested in having the proper class of immigrants admitted to this country, but we are also interested in having these immigrants properly distributed so that the country may digest them, assimilate them, and Americanize them as quickly as possible.

During the earlier stages of immigration, and until we got this large influx from southern Europe, the immigrants were, as a rule, disposed not to remain in the big cities of the seaboard, but to go into the interior and to secure homes for themselves and become independent. But if you follow and study the figures of immigration in recent years, especially since this large influx from Europe, you will find a great disposition among them to locate in the large centers on the seaboard, and the result is that in those cities population becomes congested, and especially among the working and laboring elements.

These immigrants who thus huddle and gather together in large colonies in our large cities fail to become Americanized as swiftly and to become as prosperous and in as good condition as those who go to the West. I never realized the beneficent effects of the result of distributing our immigrants and sending them out into the country for the purpose of becoming farmers and agricultural laborers so much as I did a few years ago when I visited the city of New York. I went to the east side, as it is called in that city, and I saw there huddled together a class of immigrants who were in a condition like which we had nothing anywhere in the Northwest country.

I have had some knowledge and experience with this subject. I have been, as it were, a pioneer in two great States of the Northwest—the State of Wisconsin, where I spent my childhood and youth, and the State of Minnesota, which is now my home. I have noticed what a great blessing and advantage it has been to the immigrants to be distributed among rural communities and among the farmers of this country. First of all, they become good agricultural laborers. In the next place, their surroundings are such that they aim, at as early a day as practicable, to secure little farms of their own. Again, these people who are thus distributed throughout the country in small squads here and there mingle with the best of the population of this country and become more swiftly Americanized, become more swiftly accustomed to the language and customs of this country, and sooner become part of our population and serve to make our country homogeneous, as it ought to be.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think it is of vital importance that when these immigrants come from the Old World in such masses as they do to-day, instead of allowing them to huddle in the large cities on the seaboard where they land and the large manufacturing centers, to take steps to scatter and distribute them throughout the country.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a statement made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] yesterday, when he said:

In the year 1905 we admitted through the Ellis Island station 754,334 immigrants. Seven hundred and fifty-one thousand five hundred and ten, or 97.5 per cent of the whole number, had definite addresses and knew precisely where they were going. Out of that vast number only 2,824 were without a definite purpose in this regard. This is a very significant fact, and one that should have a strong influence upon us as we consider the causes which operate in bringing this vast wave of immigration to our shores.

That was the statement made yesterday by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. NELSON. I recognize the force of that statement in part, but it comes from the fact that the relatives of these people in the large manufacturing centers and the large commercial cities of the seaboard have sent for their friends and relatives abroad, and they are anxious to locate them where they are. Although that may be true, I do not think it is for the good of these large cities or for the good of the immigrants themselves that they should be huddled in these large cities and great manufacturing centers.

I think that next to securing as good a class of immigrants as possible, it is most important to see that the immigrants are properly distributed throughout the length and breadth of the land. That is not only for the interest of the immigrants, but it is for the good of the people of the United States, because in that way they can more swiftly become Americanized and of advantage to the country.

So, without taking up further time on this subject, I must say I am heartily in favor of the spirit of the amendment, and I think it is one of the most beneficent provisions in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the simple reading of this amendment shows how vast is its range, and we are asked to vote for it now, not only without any time to examine fully into the provisions and extent and scope of the amendment, but without any information from the Immigration Bureau which would tend to show that this measure is at all practicable or feasible. If it passes, it would amount, Mr. President—one can see from reading it, so immense, so vast is its range—to a practical absorption or confiscation for this purpose of the entire immigrant fund. Of course, it must be conjecture as to what so vast a scheme, when it is put in operation, will cost; but nobody can deny that with all of its provisions, the extensive things required, the gathering of statistics in almost every form, the money it will cost will be something immense.

What I should desire, and what I think the Senate ought to be satisfied with, is the provision as left by the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. That, Mr. President, Congress can afford to do, and it can afford to do it because it will give light, and the report of the operations under the amendment as left, with the rest stricken out, for the coming year will be some basis to guide us as to what, if anything, should be done in the future.

If it is so important to the States as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has indicated, let the amendment be confined——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator from Maine that I did not put it on the ground of being important to the States. I said it was important to the country and to the well-being of the immigrants themselves, not to the States.

Mr. HALE. Everything that is of importance to the country is of importance to the States, because the States make up the country. We have not quite yet obliterated all the lines and have not declared that the Federal Government shall take possession of every department and every industry and that it shall be a matter of the paternal Government of the United States ousting the States from their jurisdiction. I say if any State is interested enough in this matter—and I can admit that it is; I do not seek to belittle the proposition—for its population to appoint an agent, who shall for a year to come, in cooperation with the Immigration Bureau, consider all these questions, consider how feasible it is to divert or distribute this vast tide of immigration to the different States, let it do so, and then Congress would have some information, some knowledge as to what it ought to do. But I appeal to Senators—careful Senators, conservative Senators—whether we should now, knowing no more than we do, embark in this entire scheme and absorb and confiscate practically, with no limitation upon it, the entire fund.

You do not meet it, Mr. President, by passing the enormous amendment and then limiting it to $20,000, because you might as well pass a bill for the running of an entire Department and say that you will give but $10,000. That does not meet the case. Our method in the Senate is to make appropriations in consonance with the magnitude of the work appropriated for, and it is not good legislation to embark on a proposition that will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and then say that only $20,000 shall be appropriated for it. It is not our way of legislating.

Mr. President, if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire shall prevail, it is not unfriendly to this scheme:

When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense—

Let the State do that for a year—

an agent to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States such agent shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory—

The amendment itself recognizes the division into States and Territories—for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein—

Where? In such State or Territory, the State which is interested, which has an agent for the purpose of making known the desirability of a particular State represented by a special and particular commissioner—and the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, when practicable—

This is all meant to help forward the project—

may, when practicable, provide space at the various immigrant stations for displays by such agents of the resources and products of their respective States and Territories.

That can all be attended to by the agent.

While on duty at any immigrant station such agent shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any of such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted.

Mr. President, if the Senate launches this year this scheme as provided in the latter part of the amendment I have just read, it certainly is as far as we ought to go now, and one result will be that when, in accordance with the management of the Immigration Bureau, these agents have put in their work, have seen what they can of the immigrants, have made known the desirability of their States as places of home and residence, at the end of the year not only will they report to their States, but the Commissioner of Immigration will report to Congress the result of this feature that has been adopted by Congress of working in connection with him, and the Senate then will be in some position to know how far it should go in this greater, wider, greatly more expensive feature provided by the whole amendment. I certainly hope that the advocates of this measure will be content to take the amendment as left by the amnedment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I intended to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to modify his amendment, but as the Senator from Maine is giving this matter his careful consideration I want to ask him if he does not think possibly the suggestion which I will subsequently make to the Senator from New Hampshire may be a good one? It is so to modify the amendment as to confine it to striking out, from line 9 to the word "same," line 22, leaving in line 25, on page 18, the first eight lines on page 19 that simply provide for the appointment——

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Georgia state that again?

Mr. BACON. I was going to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, and I will ask his attention now—he has the bill before him—whether he will not so modify the amendment as to confine it to a motion to strike out, after line 8, down to and including the word "same" in line 22, so as to leave the preceding part of that section, which would be as follows:

SEC. 26. Authority is hereby given the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistants as may be necessary. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration.

Then, going down to line 22, there would be added the part the Senator has just read, providing for the special agents for the States.

The idea in my mind is this: If all the agents contemplated by the latter part of this amendment are appointed, there certainly ought to be some particular division of the Bureau of Immigration devoted to the particular work that these many agents will have in hand. It will be necessary, it seems to me, for the Commissioner-General to make some such provision for them even in the absence of legislation, but there ought to be some such legislation as will enable him to make that provision conveniently, and for the necessary money with which to do it. Otherwise, as it now stands, if the amendment were limited as now proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, these agents would go there without any particular department of the Immigration Bureau to which they would make their special applications, and which would have charge of the particular interests they were seeking to promote.

It would eliminate from the amendment the part which has excited the principal criticism of the Senators who have opposed it, in that which requires that the Bureau should gather information through the States and publish it in different languages and all that. All that would be eliminated, and the only effect would be to create a division in the Bureau of Immigration which would have special consideration of this matter of distribution and the work at last would be done through the State agents. It seems to me that possibly might be a convenient solution of the difficulties with which we are now confronted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Georgia agree to leave in the words down to the word "Immigration," in line 3, and then commence at line 6, and include lines 6, 7, and 8, so as to eliminate this chief and such clerical assistants as may be necessary? In other words, avoid the creation of another division, with an unlimited number of assistants.

Mr. BACON. I am not on the committee, as the Senator knows, and I have no authority to accept anything. I simply make the suggestion as feeling a particular interest in this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that it would then read:

Authority is hereby given the Commissioner-General of Immigration to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration. It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration. When any State or Territory appoints and maintains, etc.

Mr. BACON. I have no authority to accept anything, but I would furthermore desire an amendment to come in on the twenty-second line, after the word "Territory," so as to introduce these words. The present language of the amendment is:

When any State or Territory appoints——

Mr. McCREARY. What line?

Mr. BACON. Line 22, after the word "Territory."

Mr. McCREARY. On page 19?

Mr. BACON. Page 19, line 22, after the word "Territory." The language of the present amendment is:

When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it, etc.

At the proper time—I suppose I am not in order to do so now—I am going to move to amend by inserting these words after the word "Territory:"

Or any corporation or association maintaining an immigration bureau in any State or Territory.

The purpose of that is to accomplish what I suggested when the Senator from Wisconsin was upon the floor—to give the opportunity to large railroad systems which are now maintaining immigration bureaus for the development of the territory along their lines of railway. I will say with that amendment and with the language left in which is now suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, so far as I am concerned, it would be entirely satisfactory, at best, for a beginning.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not understand the Senator from New Hampshire. I will ask him to state again the amendment proposed by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Maine will permit me——

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It would eliminate the provision in the amendment that creates a chief of the division and such clerical assistance as may be necessary. It would establish the bureau, and it would probably be put in charge of a competent clerk now in the service. Later on we could ascertain whether more assistance was necessary.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the Senator from New Hampshire propose to leave in the first four lines?

Mr. GALLINGER. The first four lines.

Mr. McCREARY. Very well. Now, what does the Senator propose to strike out?

Mr. GALLINGER. I propose to strike out, after "Immigration," the words:

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistance as may be necessary.

Then I propose to leave in the following clause:

It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration.

Then I strike out from line 9 to line 22, including the word "same," in line 22. And then I shall be very glad to have the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia incorporated, because I think it is a very wise and proper provision.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it seems to me there is great force in what the Senator from New Hampshire proposes. It goes rather farther than I should have been willing to go, but I think we could this year provide that the Commissioner shall have authority to establish what is called "a division." Undoubtedly the operation of that would be that one or possibly two competent clerks would be put in charge of it. Then its duty is defined as being "to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration." And then what gives life to it is added, that "when any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it," they shall be given office room and facilities for commending their States as good places for residence, it all being in conjunction with the work of the Commissioner of Immigration.

The result would be, as I have stated before, that with this joint and harmonious action for a year to come we would then get a report, and the States would get their reports, of the operation of the law, and then we could enlarge it to such an extent as we might deem wise. We might then think we knew enough about it to endow the Commissioner with a larger force and amplify what would be a limited division. We could then also consider, under the reports of the Commissioner and information furnished by the reports of the State agents, the further question of enlarging the range of the division.

I think the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Kentucky, who are both of them conservative, careful Senators, will see the force of that. I should hope that the chairman of the committee, who has given great study and thought to this subject and who certainly helped largely to educate me on the subject by his speech yesterday, might feel it wise to accept this suggestion. Then the whole machinery can be set going.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to state that the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire and the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine are satisfactory to me, speaking only for myself. There is left in the amendment nearly all that we ask for. The authority is given the Commissioner-General of Immigration "to establish, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, a division of information in the Bureau of Immigration."

It shall be the duty of said division to promote a beneficial distribution of aliens admitted into the United States among the several States and Territories desiring immigration.

Those are two important matters.

Then the further statement is made that—

When any State or Territory appoints and maintains at its own expense an agent to represent it at any of the immigrant stations of the United States such agent shall, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have access to aliens who have been admitted to the United States for the purpose of presenting, either orally or in writing, the special inducements offered by such State or Territory to aliens to settle therein, and the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, when practicable, provide space at the various immigrant stations for displays by such agents of the resources and products of their respective States and Territories. While on duty at any immigrant station such agent shall be subject to all the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, who, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may, for violation of any of such regulations, deny to the agent guilty of such violation any of the privileges herein granted. The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

That contains all of the amendment except that part of it which refers to gathering from available sources information that can be furnished by the States. The amendment as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is a good start in the direction I wish to go. I am satisfied with it.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator is satisfied. I hope——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I will yield to the Senator from Vermont. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not complicate the matter until after we finish the portion we have now been considering, and that we will establish what shall be put in before he introduces the question of corporations, because that is a distinctive matter upon which Senators will divide in sentiment. I think we can agree upon the other matter.

Mr. BACON. The Senator appeals to me, I suppose. He will remember the fact that I stated I simply gave notice that I intended to offer it after this amendment is disposed of. I believe I myself suggested the very amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire now proposes, and so I must be in favor of it. It is not necessary to appeal to me to agree to that.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I think I should state, in justice to the committee, that when this amendment was drafted we had in mind two classes of aliens—those who are passing through our immigrant stations day by day, who will be provided for if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted, and also that other class, a large number of whom have centered in the large cities of the country. The leading periodicals of the country have often called attention to their condition and to the necessity of relieving the congestion existing in many of the cities by promoting the distribution of that class of aliens and inducing them to go into the country districts. Quite a large number of charitable organizations have been formed for this purpose and are working in this direction.

I may say at this point that one of the very best works these associations are doing is to take the immigrants who come to the large cities and make an attempt to secure their distribution before they become fully settled in the cities. I am told that out of the comparatively small number of immigrants who are admitted and who have no definite address, and therefore go into New York City, as much as 60 per cent are being diverted and sent to points outside of that city within sixty days after they arrive. I make this statement upon the authority of a gentleman who has been in consultation with the class of associations which I have mentioned and who secured information upon which the statement was based.

But I see from the debate that a portion of this amendment is drawn in such a way as to fail of the approbation, apparently, of the Senate; and I do not wish to stand in the way of any amendment which will leave so much of the proposed amendment as will inaugurate the work along the lines which have been suggested by the various Senators who have discussed this question.

I am in entire sympathy with what has been said by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I believe that with a properly drawn provision we can make a decided impress upon the congested districts of our large cities, and that we can benefit that class of our residents and benefit the country as well by promoting a distribution of them. But I do not know that it is possible at this late hour to draft an amendment to the bill which will meet that condition. I shall therefore not oppose the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the amendment I offered and now move to amend the amendment by striking out, in lines 3, 4, and 5, on page 19, the words, "The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall appoint a chief of such division and such clerical assistance as may be necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move to strike out from line 9 to line 22, including the word "same," in line 22.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, the Senator from Georgia might with propriety offer his amendment.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 22, after the word "Territory," insert:

Or any corporation or association maintaining an immigration bureau in any State or Territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out the last sentence in the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment strike out the words:

The expense of carrying the provisions of this section into effect shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

Mr. LODGE. I think we need a substitute there, because as we have left it it will involve expense. I suggest that we strike out the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from New Hampshire and insert:

Twenty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from the immigrant fund to carry the provisions of this section into effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20 at the end of the proposed amendment strike out the following words:

And insert:

Twenty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from the immigrant fund to carry the provisions of this section into effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Immigration I propose an amendment which is a redraft of section 22 of the act of 1903, to come in as a new section.

That section 22 of the act of March 3, 1903, be amended to read as follows——

Mr. HALE. The Senator's amendment is to come in at the end of the bill. Will the Senator withhold it for a moment until I can make certain inquiries of the Senator in charge of the bill in reference to matters as we go along?

Mr. LODGE. The other committee amendments have been disposed of. This is merely a formal amendment, and it will not take a moment, if the Senator will allow it to go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts, on behalf of the Committee on Immigration, offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill:

That section 22 of the act of March 3, 1903, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, in addition to such other duties as may by law be assigned to him, shall, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder. He shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bonds, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contracts for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid; all under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to detail officers of the immigration service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States, and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers and also surgeons, in accordance with the provisions of section 17, for service in foreign countries."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I yielded the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in order that he might put in his amendment. I supposed that I held the floor. I will have no question with the Senator from Kentucky.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed the Senator from Maine had yielded the floor.

Mr. HALE. I did not; but I raise no question with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I yield to the Senator from Maine if necessary.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; let the Senator go on.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, in the remarks I made I referred to the fact that there is no commissioner of immigration, so far as I was informed and so far as I find in the Congressional Directory, on the southern coast. The commissioners of immigration are put down in this book as follows:

Robert Watchorn, Ellis Island, New York Harbor; George B. Billings, Long Wharf, Boston, Mass.; John J. S. Rodgers, Delaware Insurance Building, Philadelphia, Pa.; Louis T. Weis, Knickerbocker Building, Baltimore, Md.; Hart H. North, San Francisco, Cal.; John H. Clarke, Montreal, Province of Quebec; Graham L. Rice, San Juan, P. R.

I desire to offer an amendment providing for a commissioner of immigration at New Orleans. If there is any reason why it should not be done I would be very glad to have the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, in whom I have great confidence, make the proper explanation.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know that I understand what the Senator's proposition is.

Mr. McCREARY. I have read the list of commissioners of immigration.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I heard that.

Mr. McCREARY. I find that there is no commissioner of immigration on the southern coast, at any southern port.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Is it not a matter of discretion with the Commissioner-General where they shall be stationed?

Mr. McCREARY. It may be, but he has had that discretion for a number of years and there does not seem to be any at New Orleans.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What is the Senator's proposition?

Mr. McCREARY. My proposition is to offer an amendment to the bill providing that—

The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall appoint a commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other immigration commissioners at their respective posts.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I think with the word "shall" stricken out and the word "may" written in, there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I will make that change. I am willing to do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the pending amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may appoint a commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other immigration commissioners at their respective posts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I wish to carry the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], in charge of the bill, back to section 12 and the provisions of section 13. What I am afraid of is that perhaps inadvertently we may pass a bill that practically removes all the inspection and examination and weeding out of improper and unsatisfactory immigrants from the other side of the Atlantic and substitute the examinations here. Let me read that the Senator may hear, on page 10, line 16:

SEC. 12. That upon the arrival of any alien by water at any port within the United States it shall be the duty of the master or commanding officer of the steamer, sailing, or other vessel having said alien on board, to deliver to the immigration officers at the port of arrival lists or manifests made at the time and place of embarkation of such alien on board such steamer or vessel.

There was some suggestion made yesterday, and some little debate arose as to what this manifest covered; but, looking at this section as I have read it, it only requires that the manifest shall cover the immigrant on board the vessel.

Now, if you will go to page 12, line 18, you will find that the provision is not in relation to examination and discrimination and selection abroad, but on this side:

SEC. 13. That all aliens arriving by water at the ports of the United States shall be listed in convenient groups—

That is on this side. Then below, not reading all the others, in line 25 it is provided that:

Each list or manifest shall be verified by the signature and the oath or affirmation of the master or commanding officer, or the first or second below him in command, taken before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, to the effect that he has caused the——

Mr. LODGE. That is the existing law.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Massachusetts says that is the existing law, but, so far as I can see, this is intended as a complete bill for the guidance of officers in the application of the law on this great question to immigration.

Now, taking the two provisions I have read, I do not see that any provision is made anywhere for the examination that is so essential on the other side. It is all upon this side.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I am seeking information.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will read section 9, line 10, he will there find a provision that would seem to apply. It may not be comprehensive enough. In referring to the excluded classes, it says:

And if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time—

I think that assumes that there is an examination made at the time of embarkation on foreign sail. I suppose, probably, that could not be compelled.

Mr. HALE. What thought has the Senator in mind when he says it could not be compelled?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain it to the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. We can not compel. We can not say that a vessel flying a foreign flag, belonging to a foreign country, shall not be cleared from a foreign port unless it has conformed to certain provisions of our laws. We have no power to do that whatsoever.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. All we can do is to impose upon the steamship companies the penalty of $100 and the expense of carrying back each immigrant they bring contrary to our existing laws. We have no power to prevent their taking unlawfully an immigrant and clearing with him from Naples or Hamburg if they choose to do it. But, as a matter of fact, our consuls look over the manifests. We ought to have a medical examination there, and I shall offer an amendment presently for that purpose. We ought to have a medical examiner or physician at the great ports of embarkation who shall look over the immigrants and manifests and make proper report to the steamship companies there. That is all we can do.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is in line with what my inquiry is leading to. I do not think we should let the bill pass and in any way relax whatever provisions we may consistently adopt providing for examination upon the other side, so that it is not all left for examination here. That examination, fortified by the amendment indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, instead of being lessened or destroyed, I should say would be improved and increased, as it ought.

In every possible way we ought to endow our consular force abroad with the authority, with the material, with the proper funds, and with the proper help for the examination and certification of these immigrants, so that when they come here they will have been subject to that inspection, and if the steamship companies are as responsible as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] believes they are, and as he indicated very clearly and very cogently in his speech yesterday, there will be no difficulty in the application of an examination abroad that shall practically be a weeding-out process. I hope the committee in charge of this matter will see to it that the bill does not pass in any way so as to strike down the examination upon the other side.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. As to steamship companies transporting immigrants to the United States, why can we not, in any regulation which we may make, provide that immigrants shall not be landed in the United States unless they have previously undergone an inspection by one of our officers?

Mr. LODGE. We can at the port of arrival.

Mr. CARMACK. Why not at any port?

Mr. LODGE. We can not do so as to a foreign port, of course. We have no power to clear a vessel at a foreign port.

Mr. CARMACK. I know that.

Mr. LODGE. We can not prevent a steamship sailing from any port she chooses, if the laws of the country permit.

Mr. CARMACK. We can prevent the landing of immigrants here unless the steamship companies comply with any regulation we may make as to their inspection.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but no country would permit, as a matter of right, such an inspection by our officers at their ports.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it seems to me that we in this country are the parties most interested. We receive these immigrants in our harborage; we make them a part of our population, and I think we have the power to declare, in any form, not only a restriction upon steamship companies landing immigrants, but a prohibition against landing immigrants unless certain conditions are observed by them in their sailing. I think we have that right. I do not feel that I know enough about it now to say in what form I should put that; but I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is a good one, for the Committee on Immigration, either now or at some other time, will be obliged to come to that and to consider the extent and range of the power we have if we choose to exercise it.

Mr. CARMACK. Might we not require every vessel engaged in transporting immigrants to the United States to carry on board inspectors?

Mr. HALE. That we can do.

Mr. CARMACK. And that it shall submit to an examination and inspection of immigrants at the port of embarkation, and, unless the owners of such vessel will submit to that regulation, that it shall not engage in transporting immigrants to the United States? Why can we not do that?

Mr. HALE. I think we can.

Mr. LODGE. We could, of course, require that they should carry an inspector; but it seems to me very obvious that we can not impose on any vessel in a foreign port any condition as to her clearance from that port.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator from Massachusetts any doubt that we could say, in two lines, "that from and after the 1st day of July next no immigrant shall be landed by any steamship at any port of the United States?" Has the Senator any doubt that we could do that?

Mr. LODGE. None whatever.

Mr. HALE. Then, clearly, if we can do that, that ends it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; but I should like to answer the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] first.

Mr. LATIMER. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. The proposition the Senator from Maine states is a very different one. We can say to the world that they shall not bring immigrants to the United States, but we can not say that an officer of the United States shall go aboard a foreign vessel in a foreign port and examine her cargo and her passengers. That we can not do; and we would never permit such a thing for one moment in our own ports. Suppose, for instance, that Italy should say that no Italian who had immigrated here or Germany should say that no German who had immigrated here should be returned, that they would have an officer go on board an American ship at New York, and that that ship should not sail unless it submitted to an examination by a German or an Italian officer. Of course we would not submit to that for one moment. We could not allow officers of another government to examine our ships. They would not allow us to examine theirs; but as a matter of comity they do allow it to be done.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not take that position at all; but we could make a provision that no immigrant should be landed in the United States unless he first had a certificate from a consular officer, a special agent, or some one else abroad, that he had been examined and had received a proper certificate.

Mr. LODGE. We considered the question of consular examination and consular inspection very thoroughly some years ago. In more than one country in Europe we were informed that they would not permit it; that they would not allow consuls to inspect and certify as to immigrants coming to this country; that that was something they could not possibly permit.

There are other objections to consular inspection, which it is not necessary for me to go into; but we could wisely appoint medical examiners and inspectors at the different ports, and, of course, the steamship companies would comply with what we desired in that respect, because we could make it uncomfortable for them at the port of arrival if they did not do so, but we could not provide by absolute law as to what should be done at the point of departure.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President, the point that has been troubling me in regard to the immigration question has been the anxiety on the part of the steamship companies to bring as many immigrants as possible to the United States, so that they might collect the transportation fee. If the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration is correct, they have distributed circulars throughout Europe and have had men traveling all over the various countries who were getting commissions for selling tickets and encouraging immigrants to come to the United States. Now you propose to put an examiner on board the vessel. He makes an examination, and diseased people, who are prevented under sections 2 and 9 from coming to the United States, escape the examiner and land in the United States. We have a penalty in section 9 of $100 imposed upon steamship companies for bringing dangerous contagious diseased aliens to the United States who could have been detected by proper medical examination at the time of foreign embarkation. These persons are prohibited from coming here under section 2. Suppose under this examination by a medical officer they escape and they get into the United States. Then what do you propose to do in regard to them? Do you propose to make the steamship companies take these immigrants back to the country from which they came and exempt the steamship company from all liability by reason of the medical examination made by our surgeons; and if not, what do we accomplish by making this examination?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I would not alter the existing law in that respect.

Mr. LATIMER. Upon what ground of fairness and justice would you fine a steamship company $100 for each person brought here when he had been passed as physically sound by our examiners and physicians?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think they should be fined if our medical examiners should pass improper persons.

Mr. LATIMER. The proposition now is to put an examiner on each of these vessels to examine immigrants before they land here. If they have been examined, have received a certificate, and have come here, and prove, after they reach here, to be improper persons, who are forbidden, under sections 2 and 9, from landing in the United States, I say the penalty in section 9 of $100 against the steamship company from bringing them to the United States——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is under a misapprehension. There is no law of that character whatever that I know of, and certainly no such amendment is going to be proposed by me.

Mr. LATIMER. I refer to the present law.

Mr. LODGE. There is no such provision that a man who has been given a certificate there shall be again examined here.

Mr. LATIMER. I said the proposition made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was that we would have a physician on board the vessel to make examinations; and I suggested that in case an examination was made, and the diseased persons should escape the physician and they should come here, as about 1,600 came here last year who were diseased and had to be sent back after they had been brought to our ports, and who were prohibited under section 2 from coming here—what would you do in regard to that?

Mr. LODGE. It is not proposed, as I understand, by anyone that an examiner at the point of embarkation should certify. I do not understand that that is the case. The purpose of having examiners there is to prevent, so far as possible, the immigrants from starting. We should say to the steamship companies: "These people are obnoxious to the law, and you ought not to take them." That saves the infliction of a hardship on the immigrant, and the steamship company then takes them at its own obvious risk.

Mr. President, it is an additional precaution to have the inspection officers over there; but I would not give them the power to certify any immigrant, for the reason stated by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], but would simply provide them as a means of increasing the inspection and preventing the bringing in of undesirable people.

It might as well be understood, Mr. President, that the steamship companies will bring in here just as many people and just as bad people, without reference to anything but their own pockets, as the law will permit. They do not want to stop immigration. They will bring anything that the law will let them bring; and we are dealing with that situation.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. I want to say to the Senator, in connection with the statement he has just made, that I think I have an amendment to section 9 that will remedy the situation.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator has such an amendment. I shall be very glad to vote for it if he has.

Mr. LATIMER. I think every Senator present will admit that the evil connected with this whole question is the profit which the steamship companies get in bringing immigrants to the United States. If you could take the profit out of bringing aliens of the excluded classes, there would not be a steamship line, in my judgment, that would encourage these people to come here.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator from South Carolina offers his amendment, I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] whether he does not think that by having the consular officers strengthened, as is proposed by an amendment which he will offer, that that, while not carrying certification, is practically a part of the weeding-out process, and applies at the other end as well as at this?

Mr. LODGE. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. That is all I seek to accomplish.

Mr. LODGE. The section which I have just offered, and which has been adopted, provides one of the changes of the law. It reads:

> That the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers and also surgeons, in accordance with the provisions of section 17—> for service in foreign countries.

Which requires their being taken from the Marine-Hospital Service—

I propose to offer, and I shall offer when the committee amendments shall have been completed, on page 3, beginning on line 12, the following words to be inserted:

> Medical examiners or physicians to be attached to consulates at ports of embarkation.

Mr. HALE. Where does that come in?

Mr. LODGE. On page 3, at the beginning of line 12, specifying them as persons who shall be paid from the immigrant fund.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I want to say that I am heartily in favor of that amendment. It is in line with the amendment I offered. I want to take every precaution possible at foreign ports to prevent persons who are objectionable from coming into the United States.

Mr. HALE. We want to prevent their starting.

Mr. LATIMER. We want to prevent their starting; therefore an examination at the place of starting is very important. Then, the next thing is to take the incentive from the steamship companies, which causes them to advertise and to get these people started to come here; so that in section 9 I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would ask the Senator from South Carolina to withhold his amendment for the present. There is one amendment already pending, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. I propose an amendment, and I wish to say one word further in regard to it before the vote is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be first stated?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "and," at the beginning of line 12, on page 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

Medical examiners or physicians to be attached to consulates at ports of embarkation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word in explanation of what I said in regard to the steamship companies. Their business is to make money, and the more immigrants they can bring the more money they can make. Therefore, unless they are regulated by law, they will bring any kind of an immigrant into this country. It is human nature. I am not blaming them for it. The same is true of the railroads. They do not look to see what the effect of this immigration will be on the country. They are engaged in making money by the transportation of human beings as well as of freight. Our first purpose—and that is the main purpose of this proposed law—is to keep out the diseased, the criminal, the insane, and the imbecile. We want to make the law to keep them out just as tight as possible, and I think we are doing so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, in consultation with the officers of the Department on various occasions regarding this general subject, it never has been suggested, and I am sure it never has been thought of, that anything excepting the final examination at our ports of entrance should prevail or that anything should be substituted for that. But, as has been suggested by others here, it is desirable that no diseased person shall come on board the ship; first, because if afflicted with any contagious disease or loathsome disease, the whole multitude on that ship—and they are very closely confined—are exposed to the contagion, and they may come here and be admitted as healthy persons and the contagion may not take effect until after they have landed.

Mr. HALE. They would be infected.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They would be infected. Then, a further reason has been suggested very forcibly by the Senator from Massachusets [Mr. LODGE], to wit: That it is a great injustice to this class of aliens to be permitted to go on board a vessel and come to America simply on arriving here to be debarred from entering the country.

The fine which we place upon steamship companies for bringing over diseased persons is to compel them to cooperate with us in our desire to prevent these evils, and in section 19 a committee amendment has already been adopted that is somewhat in line with the thought of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER].

Mr. SCOTT. In what section is that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Section 19.

Mr. HALE. What page?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the Senator must be mistaken. There is no amendment that I can see in section 19.

Mr. LATIMER. Yes; it is in section 19.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It is on page 14, line 24. The amendment was not printed in italics in the bill because it was a part of the bill as introduced. The language is this:

Or shall fail to detain them thereon, or shall refuse or fail to return them to the foreign port from which they came, or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land.

Now, the amendment provided by the bill is:

Or shall make any charge for the return of any such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge.

Mr. HALE. That is not an amendment, but a new feature.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That was in the bill as it was introduced, but it is a new feature of the immigration law. It seemed to me that it met the point suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER]. Perhaps it is not so drastic.

Mr. HALE. It proposes to impose an additional burden upon the steamship owner—that is, the burden of returning the immigrant and paying his way.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It has been said that it was a habit of steamship companies in some instances to bring over aliens whom they knew were diseased, but before doing so they required a deposit from them, out of which the charge for the return voyage should be taken if they were rejected on this side. To avoid that, they sometimes took obligations. This amendment was put in the pending bill at the suggestion of some one of the immigration officers; I do not remember who.

Mr. HALE. So that it not only forbids the steamship companies charging for the return of any such person, but forbids them exacting a fund from which they can reimburse themselves?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Exactly.

Mr. HALE. And provides that the steamship companies shall take rejected immigrants back at their own expense, charging it to nobody and retaining no fund from anybody. in cases where deportation results by operation of law?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And that beyond that they shall not take any security for the deportation of any such person.

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is the same thing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. On page 9, line 21, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, page 9, line 21, after the word "section," it is proposed to insert the following:

And such person, transportation corporation, or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall also pay to the collector of customs double the amount collected or caused to be collected from said alien, directly or indirectly, as a deposit or indemnity to cover the expenses of carrying back such alien in case of his or her exclusion from the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President, I am satisfied, as I said a few moments ago, that the trouble with this whole matter is the desire on the part of the steamship companies to profit by the bringing of immigrants into the United States. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], for the reason that it helps to relieve the steamship companies from the responsibility put upon them to examine immigrants and to pass upon their fitness to come to the United States before embarking. I think it is putting a hardship upon the steamship companies to compel them to find out before an immigrant boards a ship coming to the United States that he is absolutely sound in body and mind and qualified to earn a living when he reaches the United States. I can see how, with the closest scrutiny, possibly some immigrant might slip through the line under their inspection and be detected on this side by our immigrant inspectors and have to be deported at the expense of the steamship company. Therefore I am in favor of any action on the part of the United States Government that will aid the steamship lines in every way possible in making this examination.

The trouble as I see it is the desire on the part of the steamship companies to make money, which causes them to induce immigrants to come to the United States. I think this abuse ought to be surrounded with all the restrictions which the Government can throw around the examination, and then, in case immigrants of an undesirable class are brought here, a penalty ought to be provided, not only a fine of $100 upon the steamship companies, but such a penalty as will destroy the profit-making incentive for bringing such people to the United States.

Suppose you fine the steamship companies $100 for each immigrant rejected under section 2 whom they seek to bring into the United States? A steamship company can easily collect $150 from the immigrant, take $100 to pay the fine, and still have a profit. But if you fine the companies twice the amount they have received from the immigrant, there is nothing left to the steamship companies to cause them to encourage immigrants of this class to come to the United States, because you have taken all the profit out of that class of traffic.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LATIMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. How would the Senator provide for finding out the amount which the immigrant paid the steamship company?

Mr. LATIMER. The steamship companies would be required to put in their manifests the amount collected for bringing each immigrant to the United States. The steamship companies would be compelled to state the amount received from each immigrant.

Mr. SCOTT. There is no such provision in the bill as yet.

Mr. LATIMER. I believe it ought to be put in the bill; and if this amendment prevails I shall move to insert it in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let me call the Senator's attention——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LATIMER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to be too critical, but there is an inconsistency between the Senator's proposition and the proposition that is already incorporated in the bill as a new feature, which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the chairman of the committee, has explained. That inconsistency is this: It is provided in that new feature that the taking of money from the immigrant to pay his passage back, or the taking of security, or in any way providing for any fund that the immigrant shall come and return on is prohibited. That provision has already been agreed to. The Senator from South Carolina has a more drastic and more largely penal provision, which recognizes that the steamship companies will do what they are prohibited from doing by the provision referred to. Does the Senator quite want to do that? First, can we provide that there shall be no fund, either saved or secured or deposited, and afterwards provide a double penalty? If that is the effect of his amendment, the Senator, I think, will see the inconsistency of it.

Mr. LATIMER. I am in favor of striking out the amendment the Senator proposed for the reason that a steamship company can very easily, under the proposed law, require the deposit of an indemnity to cover the $100 fine and all the expense of taking the immigrant back, and in that way technically evade the proposed provision of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and make a profit out of the transaction.

Mr. HALE. The Senator then makes his amendment consistent if he does not embody first the provision that there shall be no fund, no security, and then applies double the penalty. That can be done if the other provision is not left in the bill.

Mr. LATIMER. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. HALE. The provision of the Senator from Vermont——

Mr. LATIMER. If that were out of the bill, and you make the penalty twice the amount collected——

Mr. HALE. The Senator makes it consistent if he strikes that out of the bill.

Mr. LATIMER. That is my proposition.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendment be reported with the context, so that we can see what it means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment in connection with the context, as requested by the Senator from Alabama.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the word "section," in line 21, page 9, the following:

And such person, transportation corporation, or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall also pay to the collector of customs double the amount collected or caused to be collected from said alien, directly or indirectly, as a deposit or indemnity to cover the expenses of carrying back such alien in case of his or her exclusion from the United States.

Mr. PETTUS. That is merely the amendment. I want the context read also, so as to know what it means.

The SECRETARY. Beginning on page 9, line 10:

And if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section; and such person, transportation corporation, or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall also pay to the collector of customs double the amount collected or caused to be collected from said alien, either directly or indirectly, as a deposit of indemnity to cover the expense of carrying back such alien in case of his or her exclusion from the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I feel a good deal of diffidence in undertaking to make the least criticism of this bill, because it is a matter to which I have not given very careful attention. But it does seem to me that we would better not pile up fines and penalties that are not reasonable, even if they are aimed at foreign steamship companies which are bringing to this country immigrants such as they ought not to bring. I may be wrong in the view I take upon a casual reading of sections 8 and 9, but it strikes me they are somewhat inconsistent. Section 8 provides:

SEC. 8. That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or who shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector, or not lawfully entitled to enter the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars for each and every alien so landed or attempted to be landed, or by imprisonment for a term not less than three months nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

There is a very severe penalty; very likely a very proper penalty. We come to section 9.

SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel to bring to the United States any aliens subject to any of the following disabilities: Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, epileptics, or persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of $100 for each and every violation of the provisions of this section.

In section 8, landing any person not lawfully entitled to enter the United States is declared to be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than three months nor more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, while section 9, which deals with the classes we propose to exclude, imposes a fine of $100. I presume the Senator from Vermont can explain what strikes me as being an inconsistency.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is nothing in the pending bill that changes existing law in respect of that matter. The Senator will notice that section 8 is aimed at those who, with a criminal intent to avoid the law, bring in or land in the United States any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector or not lawfully entitled to enter the United States. It is to punish the criminal purpose to avoid the law and bring in a person who could not be brought in through any of our immigrant stations. Section 9 relates entirely to the classes who are to be debarred from entering the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire as well as the Senator from Vermont to an inconsistency between the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina and a part of the provisions found in section 19, at the foot of page 14 and top of page 15. It reads as follows, referring to the owner or master:

Or shall refuse or fail to return them to the foreign port from which they came, or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land, or shall make—or shall make any charge for the return of any such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, etc.

That is made a criminal offense. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina indirectly recognizes that that act can be done, if I understand correctly his amendment. This makes it a criminal offense for him either to take any money or any security for the return of the immigrant who is found unfit to enter. The Senator will see it by reading the last portion on page 14 and the top of page 15.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I suggested a moment ago, it strikes me that we are piling up pains and penalties without giving them very serious consideration. There is a very severe penalty in section 8 and a less severe penalty in section 9, and now the Senator from South Carolina proposes to add a penalty to the penalty that is embraced in that section.

I want to ask the Senator from Vermont, in this connection, if the term "idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, epileptics" are in the present law?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The word "idiots" is in the present law.

Mr. GALLINGER. The word "idiots."

Mr. President, I have no sympathy for steamship companies, especially foreign steamship companies. If we had some American ships, I might have a little sympathy with them, but we have not any. So we are dealing with foreign steamship companies, and I confess that my sympathy does not go out to them in a tumultuous way; and yet I want to deal fairly even with foreign steamship companies.

"Idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, insane persons, epileptics." A steamship company is required to show that by medical examination those physical disabilities could not have been detected. I do not know whether, if they produced a certificate or an affidavit from a physician, taken at the port of departure, our vigilant and oftentimes superserviceable inspectors on this side would agree that it was sufficient. But even if they did, who is going to say what a feeble-minded person is? I have sometimes thought that some members of other legislative bodies were feeble-minded. Who is going to say what an epileptic is? A man may have what we call an epileptic fit today, and may not have a recurrence of it for two years, or it may never recur. He may have had one attack in Germany, France, or Norway five years ago, and it is not discernible or of possible discovery by medical examination. He is brought to this country, and he may have an attack of epilepsy when he walks down the gang plank at New York. Yet the steamship company is to be fined, it is compelled to return that man; and the Senator from South Carolina proposes not only to fine it once, but to fine it twice, to pile up the fines.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. If the Senator will look a little further along in that section, he will find this:

> And if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with any of the said disabilities at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, etc.

That leaves the burden on the Government officials to show——

Mr. GALLINGER. Does that mean that if the steamship company should produce a medical certificate, given by some foreign physician or surgeon, stating that in the judgment of that person a particular immigrant was sound, it would save the steamship company from the pains and penalties?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. As I understand, it means that we lay an obligation on the steamship company to make or cause to be made such an examination of all taking passage at a foreign port as will enable the steamship company to take the risk of bringing them here. In other words, if they take a person who is disabled in any of the ways mentioned and whose condition might have been discovered by competent medical examination, they bring them at their own risk.

Mr. GALLINGER. But what I am trying to get at is how the steamship company protects itself.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. They will take such measures as they see fit.

Mr. GALLINGER. What evidence is competent?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The bill provides for no evidence. The steamship company takes such method as it sees fit.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet an inspector at the port of New York, who may have no particular competency for his job, determines, in his discretion, that the steamship company did not exercise proper care, when the steamship company may have submitted the immigrant to a medical examination.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon a showing that it might have been discovered, then the fine is imposed, and only then.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, there is more than that.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is more than that.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will go back to section 8, he will find this:

> That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or who shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector.

That means the immigrant inspector on this side, and if the steamship company brings any person here who does not pass the examination of the immigrant inspector, then it is subject to the provision.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Oh, no. I do not think so.

Mr. HALE. It clearly must mean that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or else the inspector abroad.

Mr. HALE. We do not have any immigrant inspectors abroad. The way I construe that is that the steamship proprietor takes the risk if he lands here any immigrant who can not pass and who is not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector. Then he is subject to the penalty. He takes that risk.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not think that is the proper construction.

Mr. HALE. Then what is the force of that language?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Take section 8 and begin with the beginning—

> That any person, including the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any vessel, who shall bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, or who shall attempt, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by vessel or otherwise, any alien not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector——

Mr. HALE. What is the force of that?

Mr. DILLINGHAM (reading)—

> or not lawfully entitled to enter the United States.

The general provision of the law compels all persons coming from abroad in that way to be taken to an immigrant station. This section, as I understand, simply makes it a misdemeanor for any person to violate the law and attempt to bring in an immigrant in any other way than through the regular method.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I take it that this applies to cases where the steamship company has already had knowledge that the immigrant is not entitled to land in this country and yet persists in landing him.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It simply makes it a misdemeanor to avoid the law.

Mr. HALE. What is the force of the words "not duly admitted by an immigrant inspector?"

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand that phrase to cover the ordinary course of the law, which requires all aliens to come through the immigrant stations and be examined there.

Mr. HALE. Exactly. And if they are examined and not accepted, do not pass the immigrant inspector, then the steamship company has to pay the fine.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It does not bear that construction.

Mr. HALE. Then there is no force in those words.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a further observation in a few words. I simply have called attention to the fact, and I would repeat that this is a tremendous burden which is placed upon the steamship companies, to determine who are feeble-minded, who are epileptics, or who are insane; not that they should not determine and could not readily determine a case of present insanity, but that they could determine that a man who was insane at some previous period of his history might have an attack of insanity again after he landed here is to my mind next to impossible. The same applies to epileptics.

But what I was more particularly anxious to find out was what protection the transportation company had. This bill says if "the existence of such disease or disability might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination"——

Mr. CLAY. What page?

Mr. GALLINGER. Page 9, section 9. That, I take it, means at the point of embarkation; and it does seem to me that if the steamship companies should produce a certificate saying that the man had been examined and was found not to belong to any of these classes, it ought to be some degree of protection. The Senator from Vermont thinks it would not.

Mr. CARMACK. It employs the language, "by means of a competent medical examination."

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but I understand that after the immigrants are landed an inspector of the United States may say who is not competent, and immediately fine the shipmaster; and if the Senator from South Carolina gets his amendment in this bill, he will pile up a double penalty on them and compel them to deport the immigrant.

Mr. LATIMER. I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I think he has imagined a heavier penalty to exist in the proposition I offered than really does exist, for this reason: We have a penalty imposed on steamship companies by section 9 of this bill of a hundred dollars for bringing to this country aliens in violation of section 2.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in the preceding section we have put a penalty of a thousand dollars and imprisonment for two years.

Mr. LATIMER. Provided he has been slipped or, rather, smuggled ashore in violation of all our immigration laws.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. LATIMER. But the point I want to make to the Senator is that the average charge for bringing an immigrant to the United States is from fifteen to forty dollars, as I understand. The incentive for bringing immigrants is to get the passage money. If you impose upon steamship companies a penalty double the amount of all money collected from the excluded immigrant, whether as passage money, deposit, indemnity, or other money, you will take all the profit out of the transaction, and hence destroy the incentive for bringing such undesirable immigrant.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator does not propose to take out the hundred-dollar penalty.

Mr. LATIMER. I think we would accomplish more if we would make it double the amount of all moneys received. Then there is no profit left. But if we collect a hundred-dollar fine and let the steamship company collect a hundred and fifty dollars—they have $100 to pay the fine, $50 to pay expenses of deportation, and hence make a profit. The point I am making to the Senate is that if you take the profit out of this transaction, there will not be the temptation to violate the law. Suppose the steamship company knowingly brought a contagiously diseased immigrant to the United States for $25. Now, if you impose a penalty of $50, or double the amount collected, for bringing him, and the steamship company has received only $25, there is a loss of $25, and no incentive to repeat the transaction. But if you impose merely a penalty of $100, as is proposed here, and the steamship companies can collect $150 from the immigrant, they are willing to take the chance, because they make a profit even though they pay the $100 fine. That is the condition as I see it in this bill. You provide a hundred dollars penalty here, and then the steamship company can charge the immigrant what it pleases. There is a circular of instructions issued to pursers by certain steamship companies—it has been published in the 1904 report of the Commissioner-General—in which pursers are instructed to receive on board dangerous contagiously diseased persons upon the deposit of $150—$100 to indemnify against the fine and $50 to cover the expenses of deportation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to one point. This matter seems to be covered by the provisions at the bottom of page 14.

Mr. LATIMER. I want to move to strike out those words, commencing in line 18.

Mr. NELSON. Let me read:

> Or shall make any charge for the return of any such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, such master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than $300 for each and every such offense.

Mr. LATIMER. That does not prohibit the steamship company from collecting in the first place a sufficient amount to make a profit out of it. It says it shall not charge for the return. There is nothing in this bill that prevents a heavy charge when the immigrant is brought to the United States. There is where the difficulty lies.

The immigrant boards the steamship in a foreign country, and the steamship company can collect the amount necessary to bring him here and pay the hundred-dollar fine, expenses of deportation, and then take him back at a profit.

Mr. SCOTT. This a fine of $300.

Mr. LATIMER. That is for a violation of this provision. It is not a violation of the provision to collect a hundred and fifty dollars when the immigrant boards the steamship in a foreign country, before he has been adjudged prohibited under section 2 of the law from landing in this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will now resume for a moment. I would ask if there is in the hands of the Secretary the amendment that was agreed to, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts? If so, I should like to have it read. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to an amendment which has already gone into the bill.

Mr. LATIMER. It does not affect this at all. That provides for inspection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may be read.

Mr. SCOTT. To what page and what section is the amendment?

The SECRETARY. The last amendment adopted was at the beginning of line 12, page 3, to insert the following:

> Medical examiners or physicians to be attached to consulates at ports of embarkation.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the amendment to which I had reference. I think there is another amendment.

Mr. LATIMER. I make the motion——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not make the motion just now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will give the Senator an opportunity in just one minute.

Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say; in fact, all I care to say. I have an impression, and it is the impression of a layman, that if this bill is passed precisely as it is, unless the foreign steamship companies are less aggressive than it is thought they are, we will have a good many lawsuits on our hands concerning these excluded classes. In view of the provisions of this bill that if a competent medical examination has been made and is ignored—as I am told it will be—the steamship companies are compelled to pay fines and penalties, there ought to be some medium of redress. I do not know where they will find it, but I think they will endeavor to discover it.

Mr. CARMACK. What does the Senator mean by saying "the competent medical examination will be ignored?"

Mr. GALLINGER. That is substantially what I am told, and I think the Senator from Vermont has practically suggested that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all. I beg the Senator's pardon. I think it would not be ignored. I do not know that I understand what the Senator means by that remark.

Mr. GALLINGER. A little time ago I asked the Senator whether, if a steamship company should present a certificate from a physician at the point of embarkation, our officials here would recognize it as sufficient protection to the steamship company for having brought an alien who perhaps ought not to come in.

Mr. CARMACK. That is true under the very language of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I remember, the Senator from Vermont thought it would not be a sufficient protection.

Mr. LATIMER. I do not think there is any provision in this bill for foreign inspection by American physicians. The steamship company can make any examination it desires.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, may I inquire what is the pending question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I have been addressing myself to that, with a view of getting information which would enable me to vote intelligently upon it.

Mr. LATIMER. I desire now to offer the amendment in proper form.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not offer it in my time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I have said all I care to say on this matter. I think there are contradictions in sections 8 and 9, and I think there are difficulties in section 9 that will be troublesome in the administration of this law. Now, the Senator from South Carolina can offer his amendment.

Mr. LATIMER. I move to strike out——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to modify the amendment he has heretofore proposed?

Mr. LATIMER. No. I want to strike out the provisions in the bill that conflict with or seem to repeat the amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. SCOTT. His amendment has not yet been adopted.

Mr. KEAN. Has not the Senator from South Carolina an amendment pending?

Mr. LATIMER. Then I move the adoption of my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CLAY. Let it be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 21, after the word "section," it is proposed to insert:

> And such person, transportation corporation, or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall also pay to the collector of customs double the amount collected, or caused to be collected, from said alien directly or indirectly, as a deposit or indemnity to cover the expenses of carrying back such alien in case of his or her exclusion from the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 6, after the word "officials," insert the words—> adult males who can not read and write either in the language of their nationality or in some other language, and who have not at the time of landing at least $25, and in addition thereto $10 for each female member of his family and for every male member thereof not 21 years of age.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina, if he will permit me, that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] left the Chamber a moment ago. I have asked that he may be found, if possible. He said to me that he had a substitute he would desire to offer to the Senator's amendment before it was acted on finally.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I understand the Senator from North Carolina wants to make some remarks upon the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SIMMONS. If it does not take time.

Mr. CARTER. I supposed the Senator would withhold his amendment, possibly, for the time being, pending the arrival of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from North Carolina wants to speak on his amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Very well. I took the floor on another matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the propositions contained in the amendment just read are not new propositions, and especially the first proposition, which provides an educational test for immigrants. When we reach a vote I shall ask to divide the question and vote upon each proposition separately.

The proposition to require an educational test for immigrants has heretofore received discussion and indorsement from both Houses of Congress, from President McKinley, President Roosevelt, and more than once from the Commissioner of Immigration. In the Fifty-fourth Congress a proposition to apply the educational test to immigrants was passed by both Houses. In the House the vote in favor of that bill was 195 to 20. In the Senate it was passed by the decisive vote of 52 to 10. That bill did not become a law by reason of the veto of President Cleveland. It was passed in the House over his veto by a vote of 193 to 37, but failing to receive the requisite two-thirds vote in the Senate, it did not become a law.

Again, in the Fifty-fifth Congress a bill embodying an educational test passed the Senate by a vote of 45 to 28; and, again, in the Fifty-seventh Congress a bill applying an educational test in the form of an amendment to House bill 12191 was adopted by a vote of 87 to 7.

It can not therefore be said that this amendment proposes a new principle in legislation, it having four times received the emphatic indorsement of one or the other branches of Congress. The Republican national platform for the year 1896 declared in positive and emphatic terms in favor of excluding immigrants who could not read and write. I read from that platform:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced, and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can not read nor write.

Not only that, Mr. President, but President McKinley, who was elected upon that platform, in his inaugural address delivered March 4, 1897, recognized and indorsed, in the broadest and most comprehensive terms, the principle involved in this amendment. I quote from that address:

Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safe, a better, and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the Republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and beneficence of our institutions and laws, and against all who come here to war upon them our gates must be promptly and tightly closed.

Not only President McKinley, but our present Chief Executive, Mr. Roosevelt, in his message to Congress December 3, 1901, indorsed the educational test proposed in my amendment in the most positive language. Here is what he says upon this subject:

Our present immigration laws are unsatisfactory. We need every honest and efficient immigrant fitted to become an American citizen—every immigrant who comes here to stay, who brings here a strong body, a stout heart, a good head, and a resolute purpose to do his duty well in every way and to bring up his children as law-abiding and God-fearing members of the community. But there should be a comprehensive law enacted, with the object of working a threefold improvement over our present system.

The second object—

Says President Roosevelt in this message—

of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by a careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

This would not keep out all anarchists, for many of them belong to the intelligent criminal classes. But it would do what is also in point—that is, tend to decrease the sum of ignorance, so potent in producing the envy, suspicion, malignant passion, and hatred of order, out of which anarchistic sentiment mentally springs.

Again, during the same Congress, in a second message, sent to the Senate December 2, 1902, President Roosevelt reiterated the recommendation made by him in his message of December 3, 1901. In this message the President said:

I again call your attention to the need of passing a proper immigration law, covering the points outlined in my message to you at the first session of the present Congress.

Continuing, the President says:

Substantially such a bill has already passed the House.

I have here the bill referred to by the President. The President calls it a "bill" in his message, but, as a matter of fact, it was an amendment to the immigration bill which passed the House at that session of Congress, introduced by one of the Representatives from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and it is in substance and effect almost identical with the amendment which I have offered. I will read the amendment thus specifically recommended and indorsed by President Roosevelt. It is in these words:

That in addition to the persons excluded under the foregoing section, admission into the United States shall be denied to all persons over 15 years of age and physically capable of reading who can not read the English language or some other language.

The bill with this amendment incorporated passed the House of Representatives on the 27th day of May, 1902, but on account of the failure in the Senate did not become a law.

This amendment thus specifically approved by President Roosevelt goes further than my amendment, in that it requires that every immigrant over 15 years of age shall be required as a condition to entrance to be able to read and write. That, of course, would subject women and children of both sexes to the test prescribed. My amendment is not quite so drastic. It merely excludes adult males who can not read or write, exempting the wife and children of the alien from the test.

Again, Mr. President, the Commissioner-General of Immigration has repeatedly recommended this legislation as the only adequate means of efficiently restricting immigration and keeping out the undesirable elements of European and Asiatic immigration, which is to-day flooding the country. I will read what the Commissioner-General said in his report of June 30, 1905:

As a means of preventing a further increase of alien immigration, it will be necessary, if such a policy is deemed expedient, either to enlarge the prohibited classes by adding thereto those who are illiterate; those whom age or feebleness renders incapable of self-support, if at all, but temporarily and under the most favorable conditions; those who have not brought a sufficient sum of money to enable them to maintain themselves for a reasonable time in the event of sickness or temporary lack of employment; or else to adopt adequate means, enforced by sufficient penalties, to compel steamship companies engaged in the passenger business to observe in good faith the law which forbids them to encourage or solicit immigration to the United States.

The alternative of the Commissioner's proposition our experience, I think, proves to be an illusion. No prohibition or penalties against a steamship company engaged in bringing immigrants to this country has or will prove effective to exclude these undesirable classes. So the recommendation of the Commissioner-General would be, so far as practical results are concerned, reduced to his first proposition, to wit, a law excluding illiterates.

Mr. President, there has been a very marked change in the character of the immigration to this country during the last thirty years.

In 1869, 73.8 per cent, and as late as 1880 64.5 per cent, of the entire immigration to this country came from northern and western Europe. They came chiefly from England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark.

They were an intelligent, sturdy, industrious, and thrifty people. The rate of illiteracy among them was less than that which to-day obtains in this country. They represented the best and the hardiest element of the nationalities from which they came. They were not adventurers, but men who sought better conditions and higher opportunities under more liberal institutions and laws. They were in large part descendants of the people who originally settled this country, and who, since the close of the civil war, have conquered the wildernesses of the great West and Northwest and made that section of our country so great and powerful and rich.

The governments under which they had been reared, while monarchical in form, were in substance in the main representative.

By heredity and training they understood the principles of freedom and of government by the people. They were fitted to become good citizens of the Republic. Those of them who did not speak our language quickly learned to speak it. They came with the purpose of finding and making a permanent home for themselves and their children. They readily adjusted themselves to our habits and customs, threw off and dismissed forever all thought of their old allegiance, came under our flag, fell in love with our institutions, mingled and intermarried with our people, and were rapidly assimilated and Americanized.

In 1869, of the entire immigration to this country only nine-tenths of 1 per cent came from southern and eastern Europe. In the year 1880 only 8.5 per cent of the entire immigration to this country came from southern and eastern Europe.

The few who came during this period from southern and eastern Europe were representatives of the best element of their nationalities. They came as bona fide citizens, with the purpose of becoming permanent citizens of the Republic, and soon became Americanized in habits and customs, thought, and aspirations.

Mr. President, this situation has changed, and the change has brought us face to face with a danger which we can not afford longer to ignore, and which calls for prompt and efficient attention on the part of Congress. Let us compare the present immigration situation with that which I have just discussed.

In 1901 only 22.5 per cent and in 1900 only 25.3 per cent of all the immigrants landed upon our shores came from northern or western Europe, while in 1901 68.6 per cent and in 1900 66.7 per cent of this immigration came from eastern and southern Europe.

I have not been able to get the exact figures for the last four years, but the proportion of immigrants representing the hardy races of northern and western Europe has been gradually decreasing, while the proportion of immigrants representing the eastern and southern races of Europe has been rapidly increasing.

The broad fact, then, is that about two-thirds of all the immigration to this country to-day and during recent years has come from southern and eastern Europe, made up largely of Greeks, Poles, Hungarians, Italians, Portuguese, Syrians, Magyars, etc. They are a different people from those who are to-day in the forefront of world progress. They belong, in the main, to a different civilization from that represented by the Anglo-Saxon race. Their surroundings, in the main, have not been calculated to train or fit them for the standard of citizenship which obtained in this country, and which we must maintain if we are to safeguard and perpetuate our free institutions. In the main they are unfitted not only by heredity and training for the high duties and responsibilities of American citizenship, but the majority of them are so ignorant, not to say sinister, as to preclude the hope of their becoming good and desirable citizens in the future.

I wish to direct the attention of the Senate briefly to the startling percentage of illiteracy among that part of the immigration to this country from the countries of southern and eastern Europe. Out of 1,026,000 immigrants who came to this country last year, 230,882 could neither read nor write. I have not the statistics showing the relative percentage of ignorance between immigrants from northern and western Europe and immigrants from southern and eastern Europe for the year 1905, but I have a table here, which I have found in the very valuable book on immigration recently published by Mr. Prescott F. Hall, showing the illiteracy of immigrants of the different races contributing more than 2,000 immigrants each during years 1902, 1903, and 1904.

The average illiteracy, as shown by this table, among these groups taken from southern and eastern Europe was in 1904 42.6 per cent, but taking the immigrants from the countries of the sections of Europe from which the bulk of immigration came the rate of illiteracy is much higher than this general average. One hundred and eighty-six thousand of them came from southern Italy, 102,000 were Poles, 14,000 Ruthenians, 46,000 Magyars, 12,000 Greeks, etc. The rate of illiteracy of immigrants from southern Italy in 1904 was 58.8 per cent; of Polish immigrants, 36.1; of Greek immigrants, 23.6; of Ruthenian immigrants, 58.8. Without going further, Mr. President, it will appear from these statistics that the greater part of the immense mass of ignorance which is being annually dumped into this country is represented by immigration of a few nationalities, coming chiefly from eastern Europe.

The percentage of illiteracy in these groups of immigrants from northern and western Europe in 1902 was 4.4 per cent; in 1903, 3.9 per cent; in 1904, 4 per cent, while the percentage of illiteracy of those from southern and eastern Europe in 1902 was 44.3; in 1903, 39.7 per cent; in 1904, 42.6 per cent.

I have a table here showing the number of illiterates among the Italians, Poles, Syrians, and Ruthenians which arrived in New York during the year 1901. It appears from this table, taken from the book by Hall, to which I have before referred, that of the southern Italians 62 per cent of the males and 74 per cent of the females who arrived in that city in that year did not know a letter in the book; of the Poles so arriving that 36 per cent of the males and 48 per cent of the females were illiterate; of the Lithuanians it was found that 66 per cent of the males and 78 per cent of the females were utterly uneducated, and of the Syrians 55 per cent of the males and 81 per cent of the females could not read and write.

Mr. President, this is the character of immigrants who are coming to our country at this time, or at least 66⅔ per cent of the immigration that is flowing into this country to-day is made up of this class of people.

Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as meaning that an uneducated man—an unlettered man—may not, under certain circumstances and conditions, make a good citizen; that he may not make, in some cases, among the best of citizens. I know, as a matter of fact coming within my own knowledge and experience, that some of the best citizens in this country, certainly some of the best in my State, some of the thriftiest, some of the most honest, some of the most intelligent, if you please, are men who do not know a letter in the book. It is not true of an American that because he happens to be unlettered he is ignorant. Happily under our system of government, with our churches open to all, with our courts, with our hustings discussions and debates, with the absence of class distinctions, bringing the unlettered man in constant contact and association with the best intelligence of his community, by association and absorption, the American citizen, without being educated, without school advantages, becomes an intelligent citizen, not only capable of the highest thrift, but capable of understanding the duties and responsibilities and of exercising the privileges of citizenship in a country where the people govern.

But, Mr. President, these illiterates coming to us from southern Italy, from Poland, and parts of Austria-Hungary, these ignorant Syrians, Poles, and Armenians that are pouring in upon us year after year, have been brought up under no such environments, with no such advantages. From the beginning of their lives up to the time they come to these shores their associations have been those of ignorance; their surroundings have been such that they could not by association and absorption acquire sufficient knowledge or understanding to become in virtue of character and intelligence good and competent citizens of a republic where every man is a sovereign. Coming to us, as they do, steeped in ignorance, without any conception of the principles of liberty or of freedom, without any knowledge of the principles of self-government, in many instances with their beclouded minds and depraved hearts filled with hatred toward all law and government, they gain nothing by way of absorption in that knowledge which goes toward making good and useful citizenship. They gain nothing after arriving by association and contact with our people, because they do not, like the immigrants from northern and western Europe, distribute themselves among our people, but huddled together in mining or railroad camps or in the slums of the great cities, and working, when engaged in regular employment, under the padrone system, they seldom learn to understand or speak our language, or only so far as may be necessary to communicate their wants or as may be indispensable in the business employment or traffic in which they may be engaged. I repeat, living after they arrive here largely in the slums of the great cities, or working in the railroad camps, or huddled together in the great factories generally under the padrone system, they remain to the end of their lives, if they remain here that long, in a state of dense ignorance, the fires of hatred toward law and order kindled in the wretched environment of their old home is never extinguished and they form the nucleus under the leadership and incitement of a wicked but higher intelligence of the disorders and riots, which are becoming a disgrace to our civilization and a handicap to our industrial progress and development.

Mr. President, in this connection I want to read a short extract that appeared a few days ago in an editorial in the Washington Post on this subject. It was an editorial intended to warn the South, in their eagerness to secure labor to supply the demand which at present exists in that section, against the class of immigration which I have just been discussing and feebly attempting to describe. It is as follows:

> There is no better agricultural laboring class in the world than the real Latin peasantry of Italy and Spain, but they are not greatly given to emigration, and we see very few of them in the United States. The great bulk of the so-called "Italians" who come over here to cut throats, throw dynamite, and conduct labor riots and assassination fraternities are nothing more than the degenerate progeny of the Asiatic hoards which, long centuries ago, overran the shores of the Mediterranean and were the pirates, the spoliators, and the mercenaries of those bloody ages. They have taken the language of the countries upon whose seaboards they swarm, but they are as different in nature, in principles, in ideals—in all essential qualities—from the real people as black is from white, or as wickedness is from virtue. Here and there, in certain localities, one finds a colony of genuine Italians and is impressed with their industry, their thrift, their law-abiding tendencies, and their amiable disposition. These, however, constitute but a drop in the stream of the immigration we receive in the name of Italy. They are a class not prone to leave their homes. Nine-tenths of the riff raff army that descends upon these shores are the spawn of the Phœnician curse, expedited fervently by our great and good friends of the Quirinal, who are only too anxious to be rid of them.

The Post further says it "is not especially concerned in the troubles of the great northern corporations that deliberately encourage this sinister and vicious immigration merely in order to speed their fight against organized labor," but from the South, in whose welfare it is profoundly interested, it would, if possible avert this blight. The Post continues:

> It is not only that we know the negro to be the best, the most faithful, and desirable laborer for the South; it is also that we would keep the section free from the turmoil, the anarchy, and the social disaster which will surely follow huge accumulations of the human garbage shipped from southern Europe and dumped in that as yet unpoisoned air. The South is the appointed stronghold of the free institutions for which our forefathers shed their blood. Let us nurse and shield it against the hour of tribulation.

Again, I have here a statement coming from one of our officials, Mr. Braun, who was sent abroad by our own Government a short time ago to investigate questions growing out of immigration to this country and to report the conditions in foreign countries with reference to emigration to America, to aid us in the enactment of suitable and wise laws and regulations, to the effect that—

In several of the European countries it is the custom to promise convicted criminals immunity from punishment if they will immigrate to this country or if their relatives will send them there.

I know the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who has this bill in charge, cited statistics yesterday to show that a large per cent—something over 90 per cent, I believe—of the immigration that comes here comes with a definite location in view. That may be true, Mr. President, but if you take the statistics you will find that 65.3 per cent of them last year came here with the definite purpose of settling in the State of New York, which meant to them the city of New York, or in the State of Pennsylvania, which meant to them the cities of Pittsburg or Philadelphia; or in Massachusetts, which meant to them the city of Boston; or Illinois, which meant to them Chicago; for the ignorant portion of these immigrants, and many of them not altogether ignorant, come here without having heard of any part of the United States except a few of its great cities. When they land and are asked as to their destination, having heard only of New York where friends who have preceded them are, they answer giving their destination as New York, or those who have only heard of Boston through their friends or kinspeople say they are going to Boston; those whose friends are in Philadelphia say they are going to Philadelphia. That is all that it means, Mr. President. In most instances they have heard of no other places except the places where some of their people have gone and are residing.

In connection with the present immigration to this country as compared with that of twenty and thirty years ago, two facts are specially noticeable: First, the disposition of that part of this immigration coming from northern and western Europe to distribute themselves throughout the country.

These sturdy and enterprising immigrants when they arrive in this country act just like their predecessors have done from the beginning of the settlement of this country. They come, as I said before, to become citizens of this country; they come to stay and to raise their children here, and as soon as they land upon our shores they begin to distribute themselves throughout this country. Some of them go into manufacturing; some of them into mining; some of them into farming; but they distribute themselves. But that is not true, Mr. President, with respect to the population coming here from southern and eastern Europe, especially the Italian, the Pole, and the Hungarian. As statistics will show, those people have, as a general thing, confined themselves largely to the Atlantic seaboard, and to a very few cities upon the Atlantic seaboard at that. The second specially noticeable fact with reference to this immigration is the strong tendency of immigrants from southern and eastern Europe to congregate in the cities. And this characteristic is stronger in the illiterate portion than the more intelligent portion of these newcomers.

The per cent of the total immigration destined for the four States of Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania in the year 1905 was 65 per cent of the total immigration to this country in that year, and they settled chiefly in the great cities which are located in these States.

I find a very pertinent comment on this immigration in the book to which I have before referred, edited by Mr. Prescott F. Hall. Mr. Hall says:

The local congestion of the nationalities coming to us in the largest numbers in recent years is another significant feature of immigration distribution. That this congestion is increasing is shown by the following table of the increase of natives of certain nationalities from 1890 to 1900 in the several geographical divisions:

	North Atlantic.	South Atlantic.	North Central.	South Central.	Western.
Hungary	73.0	1.2	22.9	1.2	1.7
Italy	77.4	1.9	11.0	4.6	5.1
Poland	59.1	1.7	37.3	1.2	.7

From this table it appears that the North Atlantic States thus received approximately three-fourths of the increase of Hungarians and Italians, as well as nearly three-fifths of the Poles, and most of these located in New York City, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Boston, and Baltimore.

These races, Mr. President, as I said before, do not distribute themselves. They do not go to the farms of the South or the farms of the West. I know, as a matter of fact, that some of the Southern States, acting, in my judgment, upon a false and misguided notion with reference to the fitness of these people to become agricultural laborers and ultimately good citizens, have made an earnest effort to secure Italian immigration; but with the exception possibly of Louisiana—and that State has one of the great cities of the country, one of the two or three only great cities we have in the South—and, to a limited extent, Texas, the South has been unsuccessful in its efforts to induce these people to go and enter into the agricultural pursuits of that section of the country.

I have here another very significant table, which I wish to read. It is a table showing that in 1890 out of 147,740 persons in this country born in Poland about 9,000 were living in the cities of New York and Brooklyn and about 9,000 in the city of Buffalo, out of a total Polish population in the State of New York of 22,718. So that the whole of the Polish population of that State, with the exception of a little over 4,000, lived in the cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Buffalo.

There were in the same year, Mr. President, in the State of Illinois 28,878 persons of Polish birth. Of that number 25,336 lived in the city of Chicago. It shows that the same was true of the Polish population of Pennsylvania, of Wisconsin, and of Michigan, and that more than 80 per cent of all persons of Polish birth in those great States live in their big cities.

"In 1890 there were 182,580 Italians in this country. Of these there were in Massachusetts 8,066, and 4,799 in Suffolk County (Boston). In New York, 64,141, of which 39,951 were in New York County (city of New York); Kings County (Brooklyn), 9,789. In Pennsylvania, 24,662, of which 6,799 were in Philadelphia County; Allegheny County (Pittsburg), 3,498. In New Jersey, 12,989, of which 3,598 were in Essex County; Hudson County (Jersey City), 3,039. In Illinois, 8,035, of which 5,734 were in Cook County (Chicago). In Louisiana, 7,767, of which 3,622 were in Orleans County (New Orleans). In California, 15,495, of which 5,212 were in San Francisco."

This element of the nationalities of which I am now speaking not only gravitates to the great cities of which I have spoken and a few others, but they make up largely what is known as the slum population of these cities.

I have here the Seventh Special Report of the United States Commissioner of Labor, for 1894, in which the statement is made:

"That the proportion of those of foreign birth or parentage to the total population in the slums of Baltimore was 77 per cent, in Chicago 90 per cent, in New York 95 per cent, and in Philadelphia 91 per cent. The figures for the foreign born alone are correspondingly striking. It appears from the same report (pp. 160–163) that of every 100 aliens 40 were illiterate in the slums of Baltimore, 47 in Chicago, 59 in New York, and 51 in Philadelphia, and that of every 100 of these illiterate aliens there were 67 males of voting age in Baltimore, 77 in Chicago, 78 in New York, and 85 in Philadelphia.

"The proportion in which the literate and illiterate nationalities contribute to the slum population is shown by the following tables."

I now read that part of these tables referring to the immigrants from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland, and Russia, the illiterates of which races I contend ought to be excluded from this country, because as a rule they can not become good citizens of the Republic; can not attain to the measure and standard of citizenship under a self-governing system like ours:

	Per cent of total population.	Per cent of slum population.
Baltimore	1.97	12.72
Chicago	6.41	44.44
New York	9.45	51.11
Philadelphia	4.95	50.28

I now read from the same tables part referring to immigrants from the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and Scandinavia:

	Per cent of total population.	Per cent of slum population.
Philadelphia	22.95	8.44

So that it will be seen, Mr. President, from these tables that "southeastern Europe furnishes three times as many inhabitants as northwestern Europe to the slums of Baltimore, nineteen times as many to the slums of New York, twenty times as many to the slums of Chicago, and seventy-one times as many to the slums of Philadelphia."

Mr. President, I submit that an element so largely ignorant as that represented by Russian, Italian, Polish, and Austro-Hungarian immigration, that an element which, when it comes to this country, seeks not the open air and the open country, but the cities and drifts into the slums and constitutes chiefly that too often vicious and dangerous element of every great American city, is not a proper element for us to invite and to encourage to come to our shores and to enter into our body politic.

I am going to detain the Senate but a moment longer. I recognize the fact that we have been now for two days upon this bill and that the Senate is impatient to have a vote, but before I conclude I want to say just a few words about this question in connection with conditions which exist to-day in the South. It has been said, and said truthfully, that throughout the South to-day there is great scarcity of labor. In my own State—and I think conditions there are typical of conditions in nearly every other State in the South—there is what I might properly term a "labor famine." That has been brought about by the phenomenal development which has taken place in that State during the last twenty-five years.

Twenty-five yaers ago North Carolina was a distinctively agricultural State. Nearly her entire population were engaged in agriculture. At that period, with an area of 52,000 square miles, we had a population of only about 1,400,000, manifestly an inadequate population for so large an area, even when nearly all the people were engaged in agriculture. To-day there are in North Carolina something over 7,500 separate and distinct manufacturing establishments, giving employment to over 100,000 laborers, which represents a population of between 300,000 and 400,000. Nearly all of this army of employees representing, as I say, a population of about 400,000, came from the farms, while there has been practically no accessions to this population to supply this drain except that of natural increase.

We have had no foreign immigration in North Carolina. Less than one-half of 1 per cent of the people of that State are of foreign extraction. There went to North Carolina last year only 183 foreigners, and the average of the last twenty-five years is a much smaller number. Nor have we had, except to a very slight degree, immigration from other parts of this country. So that practically the whole number of these 100,000 laborers, representing 300,000 or 400,000 people that have gone into the factories, have been drawn from the farms; while there have been, as I have said before, no accessions from the outside to replenish this drain. Manifestly, Mr. President, from these conditions there has grown up a scarcity of labor not only on the farm, but in the factory. As a result we have a depleted country population on the one hand, and on the other hand our factories have about exhausted the source from which they have heretofore drawn their supply. This has brought about a labor scramble between the farmer and the manufacturer, and the resulting condition is that neither one of these great occupations can continue much longer to enlarge and expand its operations without proportionately contracting the operations of the other.

We need more labor in the South. We need more labor in North Carolina, and I want to say here to-day that the doors of North Carolina are open to any intelligent and honest citizen of this country who may wish to go there and cast his lot with our people. They are wide open to any foreigner of the white race who may desire to go there, just so he brings with him a good character and sufficient intelligence and conscience to discharge well the duties of citizenship; just so he is willing when he comes to become one of our people and to make that his home, adopt our customs and habits, and be assimilated into our population. Let him come with sufficient intelligence and character and disposition to understand and comprehend the principles of our government and to make a good citizen, and our doors will be opened to him.

But, Mr. President, I think I know the people of my State well enough to say that they would rather move along handicapped as they are in the development of their great resources by inadequate labor than to see injected into our population the element that I have described and who constitute to-day such a large per cent of the slum population of the great cities of the country and foment trouble and discord wherever they go.

I have canvassed this thing thoroughly with the people of my State. During the last eighteen months I have agitated in North Carolina in favor of immigration to the State. With this end in view, I introduced a bill in the last Congress almost identical with the provisions which are incorporated in the present bill, providing for a bureau of display and information at Ellis Island, with a view to give the agents of the States access to the immigrants as they land at that island. I have gone before the people of my State, and I have said, "You have to supply this demand for more labor from outside of the State. There is difficulty in getting it here in the United States. The main chance and the best chance is across the water. Let us go after them." Whenever I have said it and wherever I have said it, I have been met with the answer, "That is all right, provided there is due discrimination in the selection between the immigrants from northern and western and those from southern and eastern Europe who are coming to this country; but we do not want the ignorant and vicious and undesirable, the scum and riffraff of Europe, dumped upon us." I know they do not want and will not have, if they can prevent it, the Poles, Hungarians, Syrians, and that class of Italians which constitute so large a part of the immigration to this country to-day.

Mr. President, I distinguish between the southern Italian and the northern Italian, and so do the people of my State. The northern Italian is largely of a different race. He is generally of pure Latin extraction. He is docile; he is law-abiding; he is industrious; he is thrifty. The southern Italians, while they bear the name Italian, are really, except in rare instances, of different extraction. They represent largely a different race, a different nationality. They represent races that overran that country ages ago and settled on its seaboard. They have acquired the language of the country and taken its name, but they are, in the main, sprung from races that have never attained to the highest Italian standards.

Again, Mr. President, I distinguish between the representative southern Italian and the riffraff being recruited by greedy steamship lines and certain other surreptitious influences both in this country and in Italy and brought across the seas and dumped upon us, and so do the people of my State. They do not represent the best element of southern Italy. They are largely the undesirables—many of them the scum of that unhappy and unfortunate country. The real peasant farmers of southern Italy possess many excellent traits, and they would not, in the main, be undesirable. But these do not come here. They remain in their own country.

It is the ignorant element, the undesirable element, the scum element, not only of southern Italy, but of all southern and eastern Europe, that I seek by this amendment to exclude.

Mr. President, we have to have some standard to exclude these elements. We use the standard of literacy as a device—we use it as a device based, however, on principles fundamental in the affairs of men and governments to accomplish a specific end and a good purpose.

I do not believe that anybody is interested in bringing this ignorant horde here except the great corporations, who want cheap labor, and oftentimes are indifferent as to where they get it, and the steamship companies, who want the profits accruing from their transportation and do not care what are the consequences to this country. These are largely responsible for their coming. Profit is the motive on their part for bringing them. The motives of the average immigrant of the nationalities I have referred to in coming here are not the motives that prompted the men who settled and have helped to make this country great and rich and powerful. Their motive in coming is not to become citizens. They come with the fixed purpose and the reservation of going back. They come for sordid gain. They come for the purpose of competition with American labor, and the competition which follows their coming is a competition which tends to reduce the scale of American wages and the standard of American living.

I trust, Mr. President, the Senate will see this matter as I see it, and that this amendment may be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the illiteracy test. It is something for which I have contended for many years, ever since I have been in Congress, in both Houses. I sympathize very strongly with that portion of the Senator's amendment.

I think it better, however, not to couple it with the money provision, and I also think the illiteracy test requires to be much more guarded than it is in the Senator's amendment. I therefore offer as a substitute——

Mr. SIMMONS. I will explain to the Senator from Massachusetts that in the amendment which I have sent up I have added "read and write in the language of their own nationality or any other."

Mr. LODGE. That improves the amendment, of course, but it needs to be much more guarded, and what I offer as a substitute is what I introduced as a bill. It embodies the illiteracy test in a form which has passed the Senate a half a dozen times, has been subjected to the closest discussion, both in committee and in the Senate, and is therefore drawn with extreme care, and I think covers everything, including the method by which the test shall be applied.

I do not desire to discuss it. I am extremely anxious that we should get a vote upon the bill as soon as possible. The question of the illiteracy test has been discussed a good many times, very ably by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] this afternoon. I do not think another word need be said. I simply move this as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 6, after the word "officials," it is proposed to insert:

That in addition to the persons excluded under the act approved March 3, 1903, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," admission into the United States shall be denied to: All persons over 16 years of age and physically capable of reading who can not read the English language or some other language; but an admissible immigrant or a person now in or hereafter admitted to this country may bring in or send for his wife, his children under 18 years of age, and his parents or grandparents over 50 years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to read or not.

That for the purpose of testing the ability of the immigrant to read, the inspection officers shall be furnished with copies of the Constitution of the United States, printed on uniform pasteboard slips, each containing not less than twenty nor more than twenty-five words of said Constitution printed in the various languages of the immigrants in double small pica type. Each immigrant may designate the language in which he prefers the test shall be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on a slip in such language. No two immigrants listed on the same manifest shall be tested with the same slip. An immigrant failing to read as above provided shall not be admitted, but shall be returned to the country from which he came at the expense of the steamship or railroad company which brought him: Provided, That all persons, whether able to read the English language or some other language or not able to do so, who shall enter the United States except at the seaports thereof, or at such other place or places as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may from time to time designate, shall be adjudged to have entered the country unlawfully and shall be deported as by law provided.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has one very decided advantage over the one offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], in this: Many of us desire to vote on the question of the educational test by itself and without mixing it up with the money qualification for the immigrant, and we desire to have the educational qualification tested by a vote of the Senate on it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me for just a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I recognize that probably some of the provisions contained in the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts ought to be incorporated, if this amendment of mine should be adopted, and as it embodies the same principle and provides for these conditions that necessarily would arise, which I have not contemplated and provided for, I will, if I may, accept the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has that right.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything upon the particular question discussed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on the matter of illiteracy, nor on the general question, nor shall I detain the Senate more than two or three minutes. I do think, however, that something should be said in reply to what the Senator from North Carolina has said about the character of the people of southern Italy. I am sure the Senator from North Carolina has based his criticisms upon what he considers to be good information.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, he misunderstood me. I did not mean to characterize the people of Italy as a whole.

Mr. BACON. The Senator said southern Italy.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean southern Italy as a whole. I only meant to characterize that part who come here as immigrants, because I do not think it representative of the best element in southern Italy by any means.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to draw the line between the people of southern Italy and those of northern Italy, and to pretty severely criticise those of southern Italy. It is true, I presume, that the laboring population of northern Italy is, in some respects, superior to that of southern Italy, but I think it is a great mistake to say that the people of southern Italy belong to a different race from those of northern Italy. They are all of them, in the main, Latin, and so far as physical appearances go are people of identically the same race.

This is a very high forum for discussion, and what we say here goes a long ways, and it is due to that people to say, from an opportunity for partial personal observation, I think the criticisms of the Senator from North Carolina are not well founded. With the limited opportunity I have had I have made very close observation personally of that people, not only in northern Italy, but in southern Italy, and my observation was that they are an extremely orderly and an extremely industrious people; a frugal people; and a people, it is true, having to deal with very hard conditions, and out of those hard conditions doubtless it comes that many are not what they would be under better conditions. And I presume it is also true that those who suffer most from those conditions are less elevated than others, and that among those suffering from those hard conditions are those who naturally seek to better their fortunes by emigration.

But as a whole, I think they are what I have said of them. They are engaged in all sorts of pursuits. They are the growers of the vine and of the citrus fruits, besides being engaged in other kinds of labor, and they are people who, under proper conditions, will be a valuable people to any community. I will add that I myself have one of them now in my employment from the south of Italy who is in all respects one of the best laborers I have ever known anywhere, and it would be a very great advantage to the people of my State if they had a great many more like him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to make one observation. The Senator misunderstood me entirely if he understood me to characterize the entire Italian people resident in southern Italy. I was characterizing that part who came here as immigrants. I do not think, as I said a minute ago, that the Italian immigrants coming to this country now at all represent the best element in the Italian people living in southern Italy. I think it is a very rare thing for an Italian peasant, such as the Senator has just spoken about and properly described as industrious, frugal, thrifty, to come to this country.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to go into any discussion, but I thought it was due that that much should be said rather than that what I understood the Senator to say should go without reply.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I desire to add my testimony to that of the Senator from Georgia on that point. I will go a little bit further than the Senator from Georgia. I have encountered a good many immigrants from southern Italy coming to my part of this country, and taking them all in all I think they compare favorably with almost any immigrants who come here except, perhaps, the Germans and the Scandinavians. They are frugal, they are sober, and they are industrious. That has been the experience I have had, and for my part I am perfectly willing for as many immigrants from southern Italy to come to this country as we can induce to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to offer certain amendments. I have indicated them on my copy of the bill. I have submitted the amendments to the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I think they have no objection to them.

Mr. LODGE. I think they are all suitable amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, after the word "sisters," insert "or uncles or aunts;" and in line 2, after the word "them," insert "and will furnish proper security therefor;" so as to read:

All children under 17 years of age unaccompanied by their parents, unless coming to join parents already in this country who are able to support them or unless in the case of death of both parents, they are coming to join brothers or sisters or uncles or aunts already in the United States who are willing and able to support them and will furnish proper security therefor, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 8, after the word "children," insert "grandchildren;" and in the same line, after the word "sisters," insert "or children of deceased brothers and sisters;" so as to read:

But this section shall not be held to prevent citizens of the United States, or persons living in the United States who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, or women who have acquired a domicile in the United States, from sending for parents, wife, husband, children, grandchildren, brothers, or sisters, or children of deceased brothers or sisters, who are not of the foregoing excluded classes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. ANKENY. I should like to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ANKENY. On page 4, line 15, I move to strike out the words "within five years previous."

Mr. LODGE. That amendment is a modification of existing law which has worked very well, and I think it would be a misfortune to make a change.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, after the word "insane," strike out the words "within five years previous."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I shall not delay the passage of this bill, but I do not like to give my support to a bill that contains a principle which I think is absolutely absurd for the Senate to enunciate. I am not going into any lengthy discussion of it. Section 3 contains some very good provisions and very proper provisions against the importation of prostitutes, but I think it is perfectly absurd to provide that any woman coming into this country, being a perfectly chaste woman, who at any time within three years shall be found to be an inmate of a house of prostitution, shall be deported by the Government of the United States. When she has passed the inspection, unless there has been some fraud—that is, unless she came here in violation of the law—when the inspector says "now you go in," and she goes and she is here without any violation of the law, the Government has not any more control over her from that time than it has over any native-born woman. It is perfectly absurd that the United States should attempt to exercise what is a well-recognized police power over a citizen simply because she has come here from a foreign country. That is all I want to say. I do not want to vote against this bill, but I do not want to vote for any bill that contains so absurd a proposition.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] in which he announces his illness and his detention from the Senate, and adds:

While I regret very much not being able to be present to urge this amendment—

Referring to an amendment which he heretofore had printed—and realize that the Senate can not await my recovery, although I expect to be able to be out next week, I would not like the bill to be disposed of without this amendment being called to the attention of the Senate.

In deference to him, I send the amendment to the desk to be read, but I will say that the committee has examined it and it is an amendment which we can not accept, because many of its features are already in the bill and it contains others which we think would not be practicable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont, on behalf of the junior Senator from Idaho, proposes an amendment, will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 19, after the word "servants," insert:

That any person immigrating to the United States from any foreign country, with a view to permanent settlement in the United States, shall, upon entering the United States, make and file with the collector of the port of entry or chief officer on duty at said port a sworn statement as to the name, date, place of birth, and occupation of the said immigrant, together with a statement as to the occupation in which the said immigrant has been engaged prior to coming to the United States, and the place where so engaged, and the names and addresses of at least three persons resident at or near the place in the foreign country from which the said immigrant has come, and setting forth that said immigrant has always borne the reputation of being a law-abiding and orderly citizen; that he has been self-sustaining, if an adult, and has not at any time been convicted of any crime against the laws of the country in which he has lived. And said immigrant shall furnish to the said officer of the port two photographs of such immigrant, taken at or about the time of leaving the foreign country in which the said immigrant has last resided or after arriving in the United States; such photographs to be attached to and accompany the sworn statement of said immigrant as hereinbefore provided. Said sworn statement to be made in duplicate and a copy of the said photograph attached to each of said duplicates, one copy thereof to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor at the city of Washington, D. C., to be there placed and kept on file, subject to be used in any legal proceedings where the use of such document may be required, either by original or certified copy; the duplicate to be retained at the port of entry where such immigrant first enters the country, to be subject to use in the same manner as the duplicate filed with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. That each of the said sets of papers so filed as aforesaid shall bear an official number, and shall be kept in such manner as to be readily accessible, and a proper index thereof shall be prepared and kept at the said port of entry and in the said Department of Commerce and Labor. That no person not shown by the statement so required as aforesaid to have been a law-abiding, upright, and honest citizen of the country from which the said person came, or who shall fail or refuse to comply with the foregoing provisions, shall be permitted to land as an immigrant.

That where the immigrant is a minor under the age of 16 years the requirements of this section as to making and filing of statements, such statement, and any verification thereof, may be made by a parent, adult brother, sister, or other person having personal knowledge of the facts required to be made in such statement for and on behalf of such minor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill on the line of what I had to say yesterday to the Senate upon the subject of contract labor. On page 6, line 18, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "persons," in that line, the words "to be employed strictly as agricultural laborers or persons."

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator strike out the words after "persons" now in the bill?

Mr. BACON. No; I do not strike out. It would then read in this way. This is the proviso, beginning at line 13. The proviso, if amended as proposed by me, would read as follows:

And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons to be employed strictly as agricultural laborers, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is an addition?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I propose to insert it among the exceptions. The law now permits all those enumerated to be contracted for, and the amendment proposes to add to those who may be contracted for those who are to be employed strictly as agricultural laborers.

Mr. President, I endeavored on yesterday to call the attention of the Senate to the discrimination which there now is in the law in favor of mechanical enterprises, where in the preceding proviso foreign skilled laborers may be contracted for practically wherever they are needed by mechanical enterprises in this country. It is true the law says "provided that skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country."

Why in the case of skilled labor these industrial enterprises should be allowed to go abroad and contract for labor, and at the same time the agricultural interests of the country should not be permitted, when it needs increased labor, to go abroad and contract for labor, I am not able to see.

I will not detain the Senate, Mr. President, but I merely want to call attention to this particular feature. Of course there is nothing here which enlarges in any manner the class of those who can come to this country. Any contract of that kind would be under the same restrictions that are provided in the bill for immigrants generally.

If it was the policy of the country to exclude all foreign immigration, then I could understand why as one part of that policy those who need labor should be denied the privilege of going abroad and contracting for it to be brought here for this purpose. But that is not the policy of the country. The policy of the country, on the contrary, is to admit foreign immigration, and it is only restricted to the extent of excluding those who will be dangerous to the community by reason of their unfitness.

As I said yesterday, there is no system which will more effectually carry out the purpose which we have in thus excluding the undesirable element of foreign immigration than a system which will have these immigrants selected by those who desire to employ them to labor, because any man who went abroad for the purpose of making a contract for labor would necessarily choose that which he would consider to be desirable labor. He would necessarily exclude from those with whom he would contract people who were diseased or immoral or in any wise incapacitated by reason of mental or physical defects to be first-class in the performance of the contracts into which they were about to enter.

There is in this no opening of flood gates, as the common expression is. It is simply the opportunity to secure labor which may be desired. If they do not desire the labor there is no bringing of them here by any operation of the amendment. If they do desire the labor I can see no reason why, when those are allowed to come voluntarily, and these may have the same qualifications of those who come voluntarily, there should not be a similar right or privilege given to those who desire to select and secure them to bring them into this country.

There ought to be, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado yesterday, one of two things done. Either this ought to be a privilege granted to the agricultural interests, or it ought to be denied to the industrial enterprises of the country of a mechanical character, which industries now have the privilege under existing law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. Should it be adopted it would work absolute destruction to what are known as the "contract-labor laws." We might as well wipe every provision of those laws off from the statute book as to adopt this amendment.

Very nearly one-half of the entire number of aliens who came into this country last year were either farm laborers, farmers, or laborers. That class of immigrants are here in abundance. If they can do as well in seeking agricultural labor as in other branches of employment they will seek it. Otherwise they will seek some other employment.

I need not add anything to what I have said, except that this will destroy the policy of all the laws we have relating to contract labor.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question before he takes his seat. Upon what principle does he recognize the propriety of permitting those who engage in mechanical and industrial enterprises to contract for the introduction of skilled labor and at the same time deny to the agricultural classes the right to introduce unskilled labor?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The provision of the present law, to which the Senator refers, reads as follows:

That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

That is all there is to it.

Mr. BACON. That is all that it needs.

Mr. LODGE. In the first place, that exception applies to all skilled labor, whether agricultural or otherwise, and it is so worded that it is practically without effect whatever, because the contractor has got to demonstrate that there can be found no labor of that kind in this country unemployed. It is practically a dead letter. The other exceptions, as anyone can see, apply to different employments, professions, and callings, where one person or two or three come in, where it is impossible to bring in large bodies under contract. The object of the contract-labor law is to shut out the importation of large bodies of cheap labor from being brought here under a contract made in a foreign country.

I would rather see every exception wiped from the statute book, although all these exceptions have been many years upon the statute book, and have been tested and are found to do no harm. The contract-labor laws to-day are ineffective enough. They are the most valuable part of the existing laws, in my judgment, but they are sadly ineffective, owing to the difficulty of finding evidence and carrying on prosecutions. But if we should except agricultural laborers, we might as well abolish the contract laws altogether, in my judgment. I do not wish to detain the Senate. I hope that we shall vote on the bill before we adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the objectionable words "skilled labor," that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] referred to, are in the present bill, and it is the law now. If that is objectionable, then I think it is objectionable to grant the relief the Senator seems to wish. For myself I would not vote for the bill if it contained his amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 18, after the word "persons," insert the words "to be employed strictly as agricultural laborers or persons."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I move to strike out from the bill the first proviso on page 6. If the contract-labor law is to be enforced, let us enforce it strictly and make it impartial. I move to strike out from the bill the proviso beginning in line 11 and ending in line 13, on page 6.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. TALIAFERRO's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is absent from the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I will transfer my pair, that he may be protected, to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and permit my vote to stand as recorded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I voted not noticing the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a general pair, but I have arranged to transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SPOONER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], who is absent. I ask with whom the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is paired?

Mr. MALLORY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. SPOONER. Then I transfer my pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], and the Senator from Florida and I can vote.

Mr. MALLORY. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. SPOONER. I vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY. I vote "yea."

Mr. LONG. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE. Is my vote necessary to make a quorum?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. STONE. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. GEARIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN. If it is necessary to make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bacon	McCreary	Martin	Simmons
Berry	McEnery	Morgan	Stone
Blackburn	McLaurin	Pettus	Teller
Foster	Mallory	Rayner

NAYS—30.

Aldrich	Crane	Foraker	Long

Clark, Wyo.	Hale	Nixon	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Hemenway	Overman	Wetmore

So Mr. BACON's amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to offer an amendment. In line 19, page 4, after the word "disease," I move to insert the words "including tuberculosis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 4, section 2, line 19, after the word "disease," I move to insert "including tuberculosis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 9, section 2, line 10, after the word "disease," I move to insert "including tuberculosis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], for which he accepted my substitute, was wrongly placed as offered. The amendment should come in at the end of the bill as a new section. I ask unanimous consent that that transposition be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so inserted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN PUBLIC WORKS FUND.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to make a report at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom the subject was referred, to report an original bill, which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 6261) to establish a fund for public works in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That 75 per cent of the customs and internal revenues collected each year within the Territory of Hawaii, for a period of five years from July 1, 1906, shall be segregated and held apart in a separate fund by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be designated the Hawaiian fund and to be expended, with the approval of the Secretary of War, only for public works, including educational and other public buildings, harbor improvements, and military and naval defenses within the Territory of Hawaii as the Congress may from time to time specifically authorize and appropriate: Provided, That all expenditures for naval defenses shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEIR'S CHAPEL, TIPPAH COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion for a moment in order that I may secure the consideration of a bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield for a moment.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8952) for the relief of the trustees of Weir's chapel, Tippah County, Miss.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $400 to James B. Jefferies, Robert Mitchell, and W. F. Duncan, trustees of Weir's chapel, a Methodist Church in Tippah County, Miss., or to their successors in office, in full satisfaction of any and all demands against the Government of the United States, for the use of the church building for military purposes by the Federal Army during the civil war.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I should like to hear that bill again read.

Mr. KEAN. If the bill is going to create any discussion, I shall not yield further.

Mr. FULTON. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. KEAN. It has been reported by the Committee on Claims, as I understand.

Mr. McLAURIN. It was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. FULTON. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF TREES ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McENERY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16672) to punish the cutting, chipping, or boxing of trees on the public lands, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported?

Mr. KEAN. Does the Senator from Louisiana ask for its present consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has asked for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. If it is not a long bill, I shall not object.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person who shall cut, chip, chop, or box any tree on any lands belonging to the United States or on any lands covered by or embraced in any unperfected settlement, application, filing, entry, selection, or location, made under any law of the United States, for the purpose of obtaining from such tree any pitch, turpentine, or other substance; and every person who shall knowingly encourage, cause, procure, or aid any such tree to be so cut, or who shall buy, trade for, or in any manner acquire any pitch, turpentine, or other substance, or any article or commodity made from any pitch, turpentine, or other substance, when he has knowledge that the same has been so unlawfully obtained from such trees, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN ABANDONED FORT SHAW MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17114) to provide for the disposition under the public land laws of the lands in the abandoned Fort Shaw Military Reservation, Mont.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KEAN. Only for a moment, provided the bill does not lead to debate.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think it will. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the lands in the abandoned Fort Shaw Military Reservation, in Montana, under the provisions of the public land laws, and extends the public land surveys over the lands therein; but he may reserve for Indian school purposes the following-described lands in township 20 north, range 2 west, Montana principal meridian, as determined by the extension of the public surveys: That portion of section 2 lying south of Sun River, all of sections 11, 14, and 23, and that portion of section 26 lying within the present reservation boundary; and before opening the reservation to entry the Secretary of the Interior may withdraw any other lands therein needed in connection with an irrigation project under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, for use or disposition thereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECORDER OF DEEDS IN OSAGE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 17220) providing for a recorder of deeds, etc., in the Osage Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KEAN. That is a bill for another recording district in Oklahoma Territory. I think there are about fifty of them created in the statehood bill, and when we get back to the statehood bill they will all be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 24, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 23, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the approval of the Journal.

The question being taken, the Journal was approved.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 19264).

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 192, noes 3.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker announced 35 Members (not a sufficient number) voting to sustain the demand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. We have just this minute ascertained 195——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. It requires one-fifth of those present to order the yeas and nays, and the House has just divided and been counted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I protest that the Speaker has no right, when the other side is called upon the demand for a yea-and-nay vote, to refuse to give it.

The SPEAKER. All the Speaker has to find out, in the preservation of this constitutional right, is whether one-fifth of those present have demanded the yeas and nays. One-fifth have not demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is true that all the Speaker has to do is to ascertain the constitutional fact whether or not one-fifth have arisen to demand the yeas and nays. But it is also true that the rules provide the manner in which the Speaker shall do that; and amongst other things the rule provides that when the other side is called for, the Chair shall count the other side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. The rule is silent. The Constitution alone speaks, and it requires one-fifth of those present.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. A parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will take the chair. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair. You may huzza in mad partisan rage, but the fact can not be concealed from the country. If you want to convert the House of Representatives into a howling beer garden, do it.

Mr. MANN. We do not. It looks as though you did.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CURTIS). The committee will please be in order, and all gentlemen will take their seats. The Chair dislikes to call anyone by name, but will do so unless all gentlemen take their seats. There will be no business done until they do. [After a pause.] The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is recognized.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour and a half to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS].

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] is recognized in his own right for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I was not at all perturbed yesterday when the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber renewed their assaults upon the protected tariff. Indeed, I thought it peculiarly appropriate that when the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was up for consideration the theories of Democracy with reference to free trade should be brought forth and expounded in this presence. For those theories, when put to a practical test, have direct relation with foreign affairs. It is in the interest of the foreign merchant—this free-trade theory and this free-trade policy. It is in the interest of the foreign manufacturer—this free-trade theory and this free-trade policy. It is in the interest of the foreign laborer, working in the foreign factory—this free-trade theory and this free-trade policy. I was prepared for a renewal of the assault yesterday.

Indeed I was rather expecting a renewal of the assault, for we were informed some time ago that there was to be little cessation, that the fighting was to be forced, and that the country was to be informed of the true condition of affairs. I am not afraid of the country. I doubt, however, if the country relies implicitly on any statements gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber may make. I am inclined to think that the country knows more about the real conditions that exist than do the gentlemen on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.] And so the next campaign is to be fought on the tariff. I rejoice in that assurance. I welcome a contest on the question of the tariff. I challenge the gentlemen on the other side of this House to come into Indiana during this next campaign and contest with us for supremacy and victory on the proposition of the tariff. A unique situation will present itself when that campaign opens—unique in this, that the evidence on both sides will be presented by the Democratic party. You presented our evidence from 1893 to 1897. [Applause on the Republican side.] You may present your evidence in this campaign, and all we will have to do will be to address the jury made up of the American people, calling their attention to the evidence. My impression is that it will be easy. I feel as though it would be like purloining confections from a nursery. [Laughter.] I recently attended a Republican State convention in Indiana, made up of the representatives of the party from all parts of our splendid Commonwealth. There was a spirit of pride, there was a spirit of confidence, and everyone felt as though victory were coming. I say to you gentlemen that victory is coming in Indiana in the next campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.] We are going to carry that State by from 40,000 to 60,000 plurality. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I invite all the exponents of free trade to come to Indiana and talk from every stump in that State, and in proportion as you expound your doctrines so in proportion will be the increased Republican majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Out in Indiana our convention extended over two days—one day dedicated to oratory and the other day to business. The Democrats are going to hold their convention in one day; no day dedicated to oratory. They think, evidently, that the least said about it the better. Out in Indiana, Republican as she is, prosperous as she is, there is a basis for eloquence, there is a basis for oratory. We Republicans, not only in Indiana but in the country at large, have been having our own way about it for nearly ten years. That means a decade. That is a long time, but it doesn't seem as long under Republican administration as it would seem under a Democratic administration. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] But ten years is a long time. It has been a long enough time for us to rebuild the industrial temple. It has been long enough time for us to set up two separate and independent republics. It has been long enough time for us to expel a foreign nation from the Western Hemisphere. It has been long enough time for us to take under our protection a group of islands over in the eastern sea and to teach the people that the schoolbook and not the bolo is the true badge of twentieth century existence. [Applause on the Republican side.] It has been long enough time for us to lay the foundation for the construction of the Panama Canal, and to do a whole lot of other things, any one of which would constitute a sufficient asset for any ordinary party and entitle it to ask for a continued lease of power.

Two classes of problems confronted the Republican party when it came into power in 1897. There were the problems that grew out of adversity and the problems that grew out of prosperity. The problems of adversity were bequeathed to us by the Democratic party. We are ourselves responsible for the problems of prosperity. We have solved the problem of the Democratic adversity, and we are now solving the problems of Republican prosperity, and I believe that the people of this country are in sympathy with us in their solution.

I am a Republican. I am an advocate of a high protective tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am what might be known in the nomenclature of the day as a stand-patter [applause], and responsive to the benignant smile of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], I will say that I am one of those who believe in letting well enough alone. I still have faith and confidence in the Dingley law. There may be some sentiment about it, gentlemen, for this Dingley law was the first law for which I cast my vote.

You remember the situation that confronted us when that bill came up for consideration, for many of you were here. Our Democratic friends had been in power for four years, and they had made a mess of it. The country was in a condition of insolvency. Our National Treasury was empty and our industries were idle. Tramping had become a profession and idleness a fad. One-third of the railroads of the country were in the hands of receivers. Everybody agreed that everything was wrong. We were called in special session by William McKinley, President of the United States, the very day he took the oath of office. [Applause on the Republican side.] He told us that it was necessary to pass a law that would do two things, bring money into the National Treasury and revive the activity of our industries. The Dingley bill was presented. Nelson Dingley said that that bill would do the business. He was the greatest practical political economist of his day. [Applause.] Thomas B. Reed, the greatest Speaker that this House of Representatives ever had, said that that bill would do the business. [Applause.] William McKinley, the greatest advocate of the policy of protection the country has ever known, said that that bill would do the business. [Applause.] The Republican Members of this House and of the Senate said that that bill would do the business. That bill was enacted into law, and I leave it to you, has not that bill done the business? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Five weeks ago I went to Indianapolis to attend the State convention. The night before I left, two men from Indiana came to my hotel and asked if I could secure them lodging here in Washington. They told me that they had been to New York the day before and had walked the streets of New York until after midnight, unable to get beds in which to sleep. I went to the five leading hotels of Washington and sought lodging for them in vain. At last I found accommodations for them in a private boarding house. The hotels in New York, the hotels in Washington, the hotels in Chicago, the hotels in all the cities of the Republic are packed with guests. Who are these guests? They are not plutocrats. Those hotels were not all taken by John Rockefeller at that time, because he was not in evidence. [Laughter.] They were and are to-day filled by men from the small towns and the country. What are they doing in the cities? Buying goods. Why are they buying goods? Because there is a demand back home for goods. Why is there a demand back home for goods? Because the people have money. Why do the people have money? Because the people are busy, because the people are prosperous, because throughout the length and breadth of this Republic there is one continuous hum of industry and one continuous market for the products of the farm.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Those people from the country, who were crowding the hotels at Washington, came here to buy what character of goods?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Ah, those people who were in Washington on their way home from New York, where they had been to buy goods, came to Washington to see such curiosities as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD]. [Prolonged laughter and applause on the Republican side].

When I went to the Republican State convention in Indiana I took a Chesapeake and Ohio Railway train for Cincinnati. In the dining car I fell into conversation with the superintendent of the dining-car service. I asked him how business was in the dining-car service. He said excellent. He asked me if I knew where he could get a half dozen good conductors to take charge of dining cars—good, capable men. I asked him what he would pay. He said $100 a month, with board and lodging. I asked "Can you not get all the men you want at that price?" He said he had been searching for capable men in vain. At Cincinnati I changed cars, and in doing so went across the city. Within one square of the union station I came upon the People's Employment Office, at 335 Central avenue. There, displayed in large letters, was a sign which read:

"ALL KINDS OF WORK FOR ALL KINDS OF MEN."

"All kinds of work for all kinds of men!" I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] that if a single sign of that character had been displayed anywhere in this Republic during the free-trade Administration of Grover Cleveland it would have been set to music and sung from every hilltop in the Republic. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] At that time there was this difference, that there was not any kind of work for any kind of a man. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who is given to making pictures, who traveled to New York City to take a picture of a pawnbroking establishment, that I would advise him to take his camera and go to Cincinnati, to 335 Central avenue, and take some pictures. Here is another sign I secured from that agency:

Wanted—twenty-five men for foundry work; $1.50 per day. No cash to pay. I will pay car fare to works. The company will stand good for the board. American or foreigner, white or black, union or non-union. All I want is a square deal. Now, will you work?

[Applause on the Republican side.]

That sounds like prosperity, does it not? That does not sound as though there was much wrong with the tariff or anything else, does it?

Here is another sign I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois center his camera upon:

Have work in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, and Tennessee. We want Americans, Irishmen, Germans, Armenians, Bulgarians, Italians, Danes, Swedes. Wages, $1.50, $1.60, $1.75. Shanty rent, $1 per month.

That sounds as though there was all kinds of work for all nationalities of men, does it not? And this notwithstanding what our Democratic friends call the iniquitous protective tariff.

Here is another sign:

Teamsters for railroad work; $1.75 if you work a month; $1.50 a day for less than a month; $2 a day if you stay all season.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do.

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any photographs of the bread line at any one of the Cincinnati bakeries?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say to the gentleman that if there is a bread line in Cincinnati or any other city in this Republic, that bread line is not made up of men who can not get work if they want it. [Applause on the Republican side.] And the gentleman knows this to be true, and so does every other gentleman on that side of the Chamber know it to be true. I contend that signs like these displayed in the cities of this Republic indicate good times. They indicate that our people are employed, that they have work and are getting good wages. The Republican party can boast, after ten years of uninterrupted power, that there are "all kinds of work for all kinds of men." And, sir, I contend that that is the proudest boast that can ever be made by any party in any country. When there is work for everybody there is prosperity in the nation.

And I challenge the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to give me the name of a single man in his district, with which he is familiar, who can not get work at good wages if he wants work. If you will give me the name of any such man, I will go home and get him thirty jobs inside of twenty-four hours. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, a real, genuine, serious proposition was put up to the Republican party in 1897. The Republican party found itself in control of both branches of Congress, with a man of their faith in the White House. There was but one cry in the land, and that was for such legislation as would bring back good times. There was but one issue and that was a return of prosperity. Mr. BAILEY, your leader, put it very happily, when the Dingley bill was pending, when he said:

Mr. Speaker, there is just one question in the minds of the American people and that one question is prosperity. The party that brings prosperity can have a vote of confidence. The party that fails to bring prosperity is certain to encounter a vote of want of confidence. That is the supreme issue—prosperity. If you bring it, the country will credit you for your good service. If you fail to bring it, the country will dismiss you from its service. If you demonstrate, as demonstrate you will, that a high protective tariff under the gold standard will not bring prosperity, I will stake my political fortune on the proposition that the American people will then vote to restore bimetallism as the only means of restoring prosperity to this country.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, that at that critical time the Democrates defined the issue—told us exactly what was demanded. That was just before the final vote on the Dingley law. [Applause on the Republican side.] I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House to those words of their leader, Mr. BAILEY, and to the issue, prosperity. Your leader challenged us on the issue of prosperity. We accepted the challenge, and now we come back to you with the signs displayed in the sky all over this broad land, "all kinds of work for all kinds of men." [Applause on the Republican side.] I shall never forget, Mr. Chairman, the day the Dingley law was passed. That was a dramatic occasion. On that day two men matched prophesies; your leader and ours. Your leader was Mr. BAILEY of Texas; our leader was Mr. Dingley of Maine. This is what Mr. BAILEY said:

You must put your principles to a practical test. If you are right, your task is an easy one; if you are wrong, it is an impossible one. As for my part, I was never more confident of any event in the future than I am that your bill will disappoint its promoters and the people. You promised to make the times better for all the people, and you must redeem that promise or be driven from the high places which you occupy. Four years of the taxation proposed in this bill will prove a severe strain upon the energies of our people and the resources of our country, but if they demonstrate, as I believe they will, the vicious error of the protective system, the lesson, though costly, will be worth its price.

That was the prophecy of Mr. BAILEY, your leader. When he made that prophecy he was magnificently audacious; when he made that prophecy he was bold; when he made that prophecy he was dramatic. He was always splendid in his presence on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Modestly Mr. Dingley made his prophecy. This is what he said:

There is not, from one end of this bill to the other, any duty which, so far as shown by the evidence before the committee, exceeds the difference in the cost of production and the distribution in this country and abroad, arising mainly from our higher wages of labor, or what ought to be the higher wages of our labor. Our belief, then, is it is essential for the restoration of prosperity of this country that we should make here what we can make without natural disadvantages instead of having it made abroad, because labor receives less compensation there than here. Hence in this bill we have endeavored to restore our industries, to restore opportunities for labor to people who are now out of work. When those people get to work again, when the producing capacity of our people shall be raised by having all of them at work for good wages, then there will be an increased demand for products; then prices will rise; then prosperity will set in, and then will come again those favorable conditions which were the envy and admiration of the world up to 1892.

Mr. Chairman, I can see those two leaders yet as they solemnly went on record. They had agreed that the issue was prosperity, but they differed as to the methods of bringing it about. They stood in this Chamber and matched prophecies on what would follow in the wake of our proposed solution of the problem.

We are face to face to-day with what has accumulated since those prophecies were made. Which man was the prophet in 1897, your leader or ours? Which man gave evidence of profound statesmanship in 1897, your leader or ours? Your leader now ornaments a place on the other side of this Capitol, and I have often wondered if he recalls his prophecy. I have often wondered if he recollects that day. I sincerely trust that he will turn back the leaves of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read the story of the passage of the Dingley law in 1897. The man who led us has gone away. We are told that the arduous task of framing that bill overtaxed his energy. His body lies in Maine, and, I am told, in a grave that is unmarked. I sincerely trust that is true, for it would seem inconsistent to place a stone of cold marble or bronze over the grave of Nelson Dingley. Let him sleep in a grave unmarked, with no monument other than the joy and happiness and comfort and prosperity of eighty millions of his countrymen. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

We agree that the issue was prosperity. Now, let us see further if we have it, and, if we have it, whether it is local or national.

One of the greatest tariff-revision papers in this country is the New York Herald. It cries for tariff revision seven days in the week. Its owner and proprietor makes his money in this country and spends it in Europe. Here is a copy of the New York Herald of Saturday, April 15, 1906, and I would say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and to the other gentlemen who are going to expound the free-trade gospel in this next compaign that if you come into Indiana you will probably see thousands and tens of thousands of copies of the New York Herald of April 15, 1906. The real news on the telegraph page does not agree with the sentiments expressed in the editorial columns. The telegraph page gives the fact while the editorial page presents the theory. Here are some of the headlines on the telegraph page. One of them, running across the entire page, is as follows:

THE NATION IS HAVING ITS GREATEST REAL-ESTATE BOOM—IN THE WEST AND NORTHWEST FARM LANDS ARE DOUBLING IN VALUE, AND MONEY FOR THEIR PURCHASE IS EVER FORTHCOMING.

Then it states this on the general situation:

This country's prosperity has brought about a shortage of money. Paradoxical as this statement seems, it is nevertheless true, and the great real estate boom spreading over the entire West and through most of the large cities of the East is responsible for it. Wall street bankers, hunting for the reason why so little money comes into the big money centers, have discovered that the people are putting their dollars in farms, lots, houses, hotels, apartments, and sky scrapers, and that in consequence one of the greatest booms the nation has ever seen is on. There have been booms before, many of them, but they were confined to separate sections. This seems general. New York City starts with glowing reports of big deals, big buildings, big transportation problems solved, and big returns on investments. Pittsburg sends stories of money made in speculation that sounds like the days of forty-nine in California. Baltimore, emerging from its ashes: Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, and Butte follow suit, and St. Louis tells of great deals in the building line. Throughout the farm lands of the West there is speculation approximating a craze. The third-rail trolley, connecting small cities, the extension of northern business into the South with their factories, the rush of immigrants for homes everywhere, have made everyone with money anxious to buy real estate and sell it at a profit, and they are doing it, as the long list of reports from cities throughout the Union that follow indicate.

[Applause.]

Now, let me call the attention of the gentleman on the other side of this Chamber to the headlines over the separate dispatches. The first is from Buffalo, and these are the headlines:

Buffalo grows fast, but there's no boom. Rents much higher than in exposition year, caused by new factories.

Cleveland.—Building activity in Cleveland. No boom in real estate, but residence districts fill up very rapidly.

Philadelphia.—Thirty per cent advance in Philadelphia. Elevated railway construction has boomed real estate sales, with trade prosperous.

Pittsburg.—Pittsburg dreams of real estate. Everybody speculating there and fortunes are being made in a day.

Cincinnati.—Cincinnati's growth steady; no boom. Demand for better housing of well-paid workingmen continues, however.

Baltimore.—Baltimore is spending one hundred million. Fifteen hundred buildings destroyed in fire replaced by larger and better structures.

When did that fire occur? That fire occurred about two years ago, yet during these desperate protective-tariff-ridden times, concerning which you speak, Baltimore, almost within the sound of my voice, devastated by fire, has put over a hundred million dollars in buildings in order to take up the waste places to give her people opportunities again for trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The next is Missouri. [Applause on the Republican side.] Where is my friend from Missouri? [Laughter.] Missouri has to be shown, and I want to show Missouri. Oh, Mr. Chairman, Missouri shows the whole country. Missouri does not have to be shown. Missouri shows the whole country an average of two sky scrapers a month in St. Louis, and the whole State jumps in business. Listen. In the body of the article it states:

Reports from all over the State bear out the prosperity of St. Louis, and Kansas City and St. Joseph are feeling the effects of a healthy growth. Chaffee, in the southeastern part of the State, and Branson, in the southwest, are two of the newest cities, being founded less than a year ago and both show a good growth. Chaffee is 10 miles west of the Thebes Bridge and is to be a division headquarters for the Frisco and other railroads centering there. The demand for agricultural land in Missouri is heavy, and many men are seeking the farm and leaving the cities.

In Missouri! No wonder Missouri deserted her idol in 1904 and went for Theodore Roosevelt by 20,000 majority. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Here is a telegram from Chicago; these are some more headlines:

ILLINOIS FARM LANDS JUMP 30 PER CENT.

Here are the headlines on a telegram from Memphis, Tenn., the home of my friend. [Laughter.]

TENNESSEE VALUES HAVE INCREASED; MUCH SPECULATION IN REAL ESTATE, AND FARMERS AND BANKS HAVE MONEY.

Farmers and banks have money! Why, Mr. Chairman, I received the other day a statement of a country bank in my district, in a town of about 1,200 inhabitants, with not a factory in the town, not one, which had on deposit a little less than $200,000. Whose money was that? Not the money of plutocrats; not the money of trust bondholders nor of trust organizers, but the money of farmers and the people living in that little town. And in the city of 2,000 population where I live there is over $1,000,000 in deposits in the banks. [Loud applause.] I venture that that same thing is true, relatively, in Yazoo City, Miss. [laughter], the home of the distinguished leader of the minority, Mr. WILLIAMS, who is now shouting that something must be done.

Here is a wire from New Orleans. I am still reading from the telegraph page of the New York Herald, and I am reading the headlines. Listen:

Prices well up in New Orleans. Throughout Louisiana values have been steadily increasing in value since last spring.

Now we come to Alabama. And Alabama has a right to speak, for she has a distinguished son on the Ways and Means Committee. The telegram is from Birmingham, and these are the headlines:

Great buildings for Birmingham; $8,000,000 value of new buildings in one of the new cities of the new South.

That certainly sounds fairly well for tariff-burdened Birmingham. [Laughter.] Now for the headlines on the St. Paul, Minn., dispatch:

Northwest is booming like 1880; St. Paul leader of Minnesota cities, in activity with many large buildings.

Now, here is one to which I call special attention. It sounds like inspiration. Richmond has been captured again—captured by Republican prosperity. Here is the telegram from Richmond—the headlines:

Outside capital floods Virginia; Old Dominion cities enter upon an era of great prosperity in building and buying.

Then in the body of the telegram we extract this choice information, which shows that Virginia has managed to stagger along under what our Democratic friends denominate as the burden, the robbery, the loot, and the plunder of the protective tariff. Now, listen and see how the Old Dominion has suffered, has sacrificed, has been bled, and is dying. [Laughter.] As I said before, the telegram is from Richmond:

The activity in real estate in Virginia tends to show the steady growth of the Commonwealth along the lines of commercial endeavor. This activity can not be described as in the nature of a boom. The activity in real estate holdings in Virginia means that the various cities of the Commonwealth are increasing rapidly in values and that the impetus of outside capital invested in business has launched the State upon a tide of commercial prosperity heretofore unprecedented.

Probably the principal centers of this activity are Richmond and Norfolk. In the capital city real estate values have increased rapidly within the last twelve months. Many modern and costly structures are being erected in the business section, while desirable residential sites are hard to obtain at easy figures. Owners of real estate are themselves speculating in houses for renting purposes, and many of these are taken before they have been completed. Every day sees changes in ownership of desirable property.

Values in real estate are steadily increasing in Norfolk, Lynchburg, and Roanoke. Danville, Petersburg, and Charlottesville also report activity along these lines. Roanoke is building at the present time at a faster rate than at any time since the great boom days in the Southwest, when that town sprang into existence in a night, like a mushroom, thereby receiving the name of the Magic City. The growth at Danville and Lynchburg is steady. In the former city the erection recently of a two million dollar additional cotton mill and the employment of thousands of extra operators have caused real values to take rapid strides upward.

Here is a voice from the Golden Gate, announced in these headlines:

SAN FRANCISCO ECLIPSES ALL RECORDS.—FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLARS INCREASE FOR MARCH, 1906, OVER REALTY DEALS IN THE SAME MONTH IN 1905.

That was before the terrible calamity. And in this connection I would call the attention of this House to the fact that a robbed and plundered and outraged nation, according to Democratic allegations, has sent nearly $300,000,000 to stricken San Francisco. [Applause.]

Here is what the big type over a telegram from Portland, Oreg., says:

BIG EXPOSITION HELPED OREGON.—DEMANDS FOR REALTY IN THE STATE ARE GREATER THAN EVER BEFORE IN ITS HISTORY.

The telegram from Portland gives these particulars:

Demand for real estate in Oregon, and especially in the western portion of the State, shows an excess over any former period. There has been no boom and boom prices do not prevail at present, but there has been a steady and rapid increase in values for several years past, most noticeably since the close of the Lewis and Clark Exposition. The fair was a prominent factor in the present condition, as it attracted investors and permanent settlers to the State by thousands.

More remote districts of the State are only beginning to feel the benefit resultant from the present influx of settlers, but Portland has experienced a great growth during the last winter and property values of business and residence holdings have almost doubled in the last year, and in some cases they have increased three or four fold. The encouraging feature of the market is that about four-fifths of the purchases are made as permanent investments rather than on a speculative basis. Real estate transfers in Portland for the month of March amounted to $2,554,000, establishing a new record. For the corresponding month last year the total was $750,000.

The Lewis and Clark fair grounds have been purchased for factory purposes, and great sums of money will be invested there.

And a telegram from Butte says:

Montana farms and mines leap.

[Applause.]

And one from the State of Washington says:

Fortunes in a day made in Seattle.

I would call all the tariff revisionists' attention to these headlines over the report from Des Moines, Iowa. That is where the boss tariff revisionist lives. Listen to the story of the heavy type:

Interurban trolleys make Iowa's boom.

Des Moines blocks have twice doubled in value, and farm lands are up.

I feel as though I should give you the entire telegram. It shows what little excuse there is for the tariff-revision wail from Iowa. Can our Democratic friends see any robbery in this? I will read slowly so you can catch it all. Listen:

DES MOINES, IOWA, Saturday.

Despite the remarkable advances in value of real estate in Iowa the State is now on the verge of a boom which promises to boost realty valuations within the next ten years.

The height of the farmer's realization—to sell farm land at $100 an acre—has hardly more than been reached in the fertile valley of the Nishnabotany, which is the greatest corn-producing spot in the world, when a new feature enters. The rapid building of interurban railways has sent values soaring, and land which hitherto could be bought for $80 an acre along interurban rights of way is now held as high as $500 and $600 an acre. This same fact is held largely responsible for the increase in city property.

Some of the largest blocks in Des Moines have twice doubled in value in the last ten years and are considered worthy of an increase, as there is not a vacant business block to be found in the city. The increase of farm land has been so great that in order to make a fair investment out of it in raising corn every scientific method must be resorted to. The hit-and-miss farmer is to-day losing money by not selling his land and loaning it at 3 per cent. This fact has driven many owning land near cities to truck gardening, and the advance surrounding Des Moines has brought so many garden workers that the city is destined to become a truck market.

Now, we will hear from the Platte River region. This next one is from Nebraska. Nebraska is the home of the peerless leader. He has told us how we are being robbed by the protective tariff. Is his contention sustained by this report from his State? I give you the telegram, headlines and all:

$100,000,000 ADDED NEBRASKA FARMS—GREAT JUMP IN VALUE WHERE PRICES PER ACRE HAVE MORE THAN DOUBLED.

OMAHA, NEBR., Saturday.

Not since the great western movement of the late eighties has Omaha and Nebraska real estate been on such a boom as to-day reaches every section of the State, and which has within the last five years added $100,000,000 to the value of Nebraska farms. If anything, the present boom is greater in western Nebraska, in the so-called "short-grass" country, than in the splendid farming lands of eastern Nebraska, which is already highly cultivated. Five years ago eastern Nebraska lands were selling at $35 per acre. To-day they are worth from $60 to $100. Five years ago western Nebraska range lands were selling at 50 cents to $1.25 an acre. To-day they are worth $8 to $15.

Omaha real estate has advanced wonderfully on the present boom, and business property especially is reaching prices never known here before. For instance, two years ago the First Christian Church paid $18,000 for a building site. Last week the church sold the site for $48,000. Other property in the semibusiness district has advanced proportionately. Last year Omaha's building permits exceeded those of 1904 by 75 per cent, and the first three months of this year exceeds the same period of last year by 50 per cent.

That is from the telegraphic column; it is not from the editorial column. The editorial column is theoretical; the telegraphic column is fact. [Applause.] This splendid development and growth and wealth and glory is what is seen by everybody who has eyes in every part of the Republic; but there are none so blind as those who will not see. [Applause.]

I have no dispatch here from Mississippi, but night before last, at the hotel, I met one of the leading citizens of Mississippi. I asked him if there was much tariff-revision sentiment in Mississippi. He replied that the only time they heard of tariff revision was when they read one of the speeches of the distinguished leader on the other side of this Chamber. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He told me that there was not a man in Mississippi who did not have something of some kind that was valuable. He said some of them have it in stock, some have it in bonds, some of them have it in houses and lots, some of them have it in farms, some of them have it in money in the bank or loaned out, all of them who wanted it had it in opportunities to labor. He told me the price of pine lumber lands in Mississippi had gone up from $5 an acre to $50 an acre. He said they were offering down there on the railroads $1.50 a day, with board and lodging, to negroes to work on the tracks, and said they could not get enough laborers to keep the tracks in repair. He told me that the 1st of June last they started to build an electric line from Biloxi to Christiana, I think a distance of 28 miles, and the work dragged along and dragged along, and was all but abandoned two or three times because they could not get the men to do the work. This was in Mississippi, the State which is the home of the gentleman who leads the free traders, the alleged tariff revisionists, on the other side of this Chamber. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Yazoo City, Miss., the home of the minority leader, was recently visited by a conflagration. I am told that the business part of the city was almost wiped out. I have never heard from Yazoo City since, but I will venture to say she is rebuilding, notwithstanding what he calls this withering, blasting, blistering policy of protection. I will venture to say that Yazoo City is seeing a new life, in the face of the fact, as the gentleman alleges, that the protective tariff plunderer is in the saddle. I am told that those people in Mississippi who have been holding land in thousand-acre tracts are cutting it up into 160-acre tracts, and that the German, the Swede, and the Norwegian people on the other side of the ocean who are worthy are coming to Mississippi and making that State their home. Ah, this is but indicative of the prosperity we see in the whole South, in that splendid cordon of States along the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean. I am glad of it. I rejoice in that prosperity. That section was visited by an awful scourge almost a half century ago, but it is recovering, it is leaping and bounding under this policy of protection which Democrats slander and defame, as are the other sections of this country. I say that Mississippi speaks for the whole South, and the South is singing a new song. [Applause.]

A song of the South in new glory,
Fronting the days that are bright;
The shadows fall back from her forehead,
She stands in the light, in the light!

[Applause.]

She stands with fair faitn for her helmet,
In the strength of high purpose and trust;
Dead hopes to the dead past forever,
And the red sword of hate to the rust!

[Applause.]

Then, forward to highest endeavor,
Queen of the sisterly States!
Forward and faltering never—
The world at your welcoming gates!

[Applause.]

Forward in grace and in glory,
Veiling the past with its scars;
Forward, till splendid its story
Is writ in the roll of the stars!

[Loud applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman from Indiana remember the name of the gentleman from Mississippi whom he has been quoting?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the gentleman mind giving it to me?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you mean you will not mind giving it to me or that you will not give it to me?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I have no doubt that the gentleman would give it to you himself, but I will not give it to you, for reasons of my own.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, it is not a secret or private matter?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Do you deny the facts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I deny that the prosperity of Mississippi is due to the Dingley bill?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Oh, no——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, there is not a fool in Mississippi who thinks that it is. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Do you deny that it is prosperous?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman from Mississippi is not answering the question I asked him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman worded his question right ingeniously. Now, the gentleman asks me the question whether I deny that Mississippi is prosperous. That question I answer with perfect frankness—yes, it is; it is almost as prosperous as that part of Canada to which your "prosperous" Iowa farmers are now going. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Now, before the gentleman takes his seat will he not answer me this question: Did you not say, did not your leader say, in 1896 that neither Mississippi nor any other part of this country could ever be prosperous unless it got free silver?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive precisely where——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Now, we did not say that the protective tariff and the gold standard were the only things that would bring prosperity, but we said that they would bring prosperity. You said, and your leader, Mr. BAILEY, went on record, as I have shown, that they would not bring prosperity, and that we could never have it unless we had free silver.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has asked me a question. I was about to say that I could not conceive what motive prompted him to ask me what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], now an honored Senator, said in a speech upon this floor, when the gentleman has himself just read exactly what Mr. BAILEY did say. The gentleman has read accurately what Mr. BAILEY said, I take it.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say that I know that the gentleman knew what Mr. BAILEY said, because he applauded that speech when it was made. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman's recollection naturally enough—anyone can see that, judging by our contrasted appearances—goes back with regard to most things further than mine. I do not remember whether I did or not, but I was so in the habit of applauding JOE BAILEY that I reckon I did. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Yes; I would say that the gentleman's mental machinery seems to be working a little sluggishly this morning. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know about that.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Speaking of prosperity and the evidence with which we come in daily contact, I would impress upon the minds of all that there is nothing theoretical about them. We are after facts. The issue being put down as prosperity in 1897 by your leader, the evidences of that prosperity are what we are seeking. I want to speak of another evidence of prosperity. The piano manufacturers of the United States held their convention in Washington last week and the week before. It was the largest attendance they ever had. I circulated among these piano manufacturers and talked to them about business. They said that business had never been so good in the piano line as it was at the present time. I thought that was of peculiar significance, because people do not want to play the piano when they are hungry. A gnawing stomach is not conducive to song. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Ornithologists tell us that a bird with a broken wing never sings.

These piano men told me that prior to this last year the best year they ever had in the piano business was in 1892. That was our year. [Applause.] 1892! That was the Republican party's year. That was Benjamin Harrison's year. [Applause on the Republican side.] They said that the worst year they ever had in business was in 1893. That was your year. That was the Democratic year; that was the Grover Cleveland year; that was the year you were getting ready to slap the country with the Wilson-Gorman tariff law; and these piano men said the country never caught up in the piano business until 1898. That was our year, and the piano business continued to get better every year, and the manufacturers said that it would be better this year than it had ever been before. I asked them where they sold the most pianos, and they said in recent years the largest increase in the percentage of the sales of pianos was in the Southern States. [Applause.] They are singing songs down in Mississippi. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He said that since 1897 there had been such activity, such development, such wealth in the South that they are buying luxuries, and buying them, too, when they choose, on credit. I asked one of these manufacturers who bought the pianos, chiefly—rich people? And he said "No; they go to the farmers and to the laborers and to the people in the ordinary walks of life." I asked him how much they usually paid for a piano, and he said from $150 to $400 each; and he said, further, that the dealers would sell more to the people this year, after ten years of what Democrats call the "iniquitous Dingley law," than they had bought in any twelve months of our history. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, I could go on by the hour and give these evidences of prosperity. Every man in this House can point to evidences of prosperity, evidences more eloquent than words. Factories speak for themselves; wages speak for themselves; homes speak for themselves; comforts and luxuries within reach of more people than ever before speak for themselves; well-dressed men and women and little children speak for themselves. There are more laboring men in the protected city of Philadelphia owning their own homes than in all Great Britain and Ireland put together. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I still have faith in the Dingley law. Sentiment aside, I still have faith in the Dingley law. Selfishness and unselfishness aside, I still have faith in the Dingley law. [Applause.] I have faith in it as a Member of Congress because I see it sending a continuous stream of revenue into the National Treasury, because it has made our people prosperous and happy. I have faith in it as a country newspaper man, because I see my job presses busy and my subscribers paying in advance. [Applause.] I have faith in it as a borrower of money, because I have seen it restore and maintain a condition that has called money from its hiding place and enabled me to borrow it at a lower rate of interest than ever before known among men. I would have faith in it if I were an unskilled day laborer, because I would know that it had placed a premium upon my daily toil. I would have faith in it if I were a contractor, because never since the building of Solomon's Temple or the construction of the Pyramids have there been so many busy trowels and industrious levels and active plumb lines in public and private work in every nook and corner of this Republic. [Applause.]

If I were a carpenter, or a stone mason, or a bricklayer, or a painter, I would still have faith in the Dingley law, because employers would be bidding from 40 cents to 80 cents an hour for my skill and effort. If I were a farmer—and I am—[laughter] I would still have faith in the Dingley law, because I would have seen my farm double in value under its beneficent sway and because I know that there is not a thing that walks or grows that I can not, on moment's notice, turn into cash. If I were a manufacturer, I would still have faith in the Dingley law, because I would know that I was running night and day, paying good wages, and that I was from three months to a year and a half behind in my orders. Ah, I would say to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that if I were a Southerner, I would have faith in the Dingley law, because I would know that it had lifted my section from the slough of despondency and enabled me, both in agriculture and manufacturing, to become a rival boaster of the Yankee. Why, if I were a Democrat, I would have faith in it—the faith of blind fate, if nothing else. [Applause.] If I were a poor, God-forsaken immigrant, driven from the land of my birth by hunger and nakedness, crossing the ocean in the steerage, standing at Ellis Island surrounded by my wife and children, with not sufficient money to sustain us one month, I would have faith in the Dingley law, because I would know that I could, within an hour, be directed to places where I could have the choice of a dozen jobs. [Applause.] If I were an importer or an exporter, I would have faith in the Dingley law, because I would know that my country's foreign commerce had passed the $3,000,000,000 mark during the past year. As an American I have faith in it because I have seen our domestic commerce—our trade among ourselves—leap beyond the stupendous aggregate of $26,000,000,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You would hearken to the voice of free-trade Democrats, would you. You would give ear to free traders masquerading in the guise of reciprocity champions and tariff revisionists, and that too at a time when the tide of hope and ambition and prosperity and glory was higher than ever before recorded in the books of civilization? Well, I would not! I want it known that I appreciate the present progress and wealth and development and achievement, that I believe that Senator Hanna's advice is still good, and I am willing to let well enough alone. [Loud applause.]

The conditions we see about us followed the enactment of the Dingley law, the law that Democrats denounce as plunder, this law that Democrats denounce as robbery, this law which is built upon the same principle as every other revenue law, which has brought prosperity and wealth and glory to this Republic. I say to you that the chief virtue in the policy of protection is not so much in the schedule as it is in the principle. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman a question, as he has referred to the prophecy made in 1896, which he has just quoted. Is it not a fact that the contention of the advocates of free silver was that we needed more money for final redemption?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Has not that prophecy been in a measure fulfilled by the increased production of gold? Has not that had to do with the prosperity of the country?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to hear exactly what the gentleman says.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. The theory, as I understand, upon which the silver men based their belief was that we wanted more money for final redemption in this country, and although we did not get free silver we have had an immense increase in the production of gold in this country. Now, I want to know if the gentleman is not of the opinion that that has been a large factor in the prosperity of the country? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would recall the words of Mr. Bryan at this time—very opportune—and I would remind the gentlemen on the floor of this House that it was not the demand for more money of redemption for which they contended, and which alone they said would bring prosperity in this country. Occasionally we heard that mentioned, but very rarely. What you did contend for was for free silver and the abolition of the gold standard. You wanted a cheaper dollar. You wanted a balloon dollar. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And, above all things, you warned the country against the gold standard. The one thing you contended against was the gold standard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the understanding is that we would alternate on each side of the House.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will not take up very much more time.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would yield a half hour to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. But there is no limit, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield the gentleman one-half hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is that the gentleman from Indiana be given unlimited time. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to object to that, but he can be yielded time by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], and what is the difference?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS]——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] has no time to yield.

Mr. DALZELL. The other side will have as much time as this side.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, having one hour in my own right, I yield that hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS.] [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] will pardon me, it is totally unnecessary that this injustice should be done to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] had yielded the gentleman from Indiana a half hour.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no time to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] had asked unanimous consent, and of course the House will understand that as much time as is consumed by one side can be consumed by the other.

Mr. HULL. Why, certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no need in the gentleman from Rhode Island sacrificing his time at all.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, just one minute in explanation to the House. I admit that the parliamentary situation is that we have not control of the time, but the time consumed in the passage of this bill——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Do I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] objects to my continuing?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Not in the slightest.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Then why not yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I am only saying——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour, the time yielded to him by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent was asked.

The CHAIRMAN. But unanimous consent was not given.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The request was not put to the committee, was it?

The CHAIRMAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The request for unanimous consent was put.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that it is not necessary to have unanimous consent in the Committee of the Whole. A motion to grant time is agreed to without unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there has been no objection made to the granting of unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of the House prevails, and the gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I regret there should be any disposition on the part of my colleague of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to curtail my time. I have sat under the droppings of his eloquent and melodious voice very often and have never yet objected.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is doing me a great injustice. He asked for an hour and a half, and I told him so far as it was in my power he could have it, and I yielded that time to him in the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one hour.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Surely my colleague——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I simply wanted to inform the House. I gave the gentleman an hour and a half, and that is all the gentleman asked of me.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, replying to the interrogatory propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOCKS], I would say that the Democratic convention in 1896 was not so much in favor of a currency of redemption. I do not recall now that I heard that expression once. It was an organized assault all along the line against the gold standard. They prophesied what would happen if we fastened the gold standard upon the people of this country. Here is what Mr. Bryan said in that celebrated speech of his in 1896, and I would have the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber give ear to it:

> The gold standard means dearer money; dearer money means cheaper property; cheaper property means harder times; harder times means more people out of work; more people out of work means more people destitute; more people destitute means more people desperate; more people desperate means more crime.

According to your party and your leader that was what the gold standard meant. It was against the gold standard that you contended. It was against the gold standard that William Jennings Bryan contended. That song was sung from every stump in this Republic, and that warning was hurled from every stump in this Republic.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did the Republican party ever protest against the gold standard?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Not that I recall.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman tell me whether or not——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to be interrupted by the gentleman. [Cries of "Ah!" "Ah!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; I will not yield at the present time.

Mr. POU. Will not the gentleman do me the courtesy——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Very well.

Mr. POU. I say, will not the gentleman be fair enough to admit that in 1888 the Republican national convention denounced the Democratic Administration for demonetizing silver?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In reply to that I will say to the gentleman that I have had work of more importance to do than sitting down and memorizing Democratic platforms.

Mr. POU. That is your own platform.

Mr. FLOOD. That is the Republican platform.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I did not understand.

Mr. POU (reading)—

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and denounces the policy of the Democratic Administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman that that is ancient history; come down to modern times.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; not now.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to ask the gentleman a short question.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Well.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that the basis of objection to the gold standard in 1896 urged by Democrats was that it did not afford a sufficient volume of basic or standard money?

Mr CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not remember all the contentions that you made.

Mr. BURLESON. That was the only objection to it.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that your whole proposition was summed up in the declaration of Mr. Bryan, which I have just read.

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly, upon the proposition that the gold standard would not furnish, and was not furnished, a sufficient volume of money to meet the commercial necessities of the world.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But it has; it has. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURLESON. Did you know at that time that it was going to do it? No intelligent man contended that it would and no one knew that there was going to be this phenomenal increase in the volume of gold.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be interrupted unless the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber can make themselves clear. I will say that we would have had this same prosperity if there had not been what the gentleman is pleased to call a "phenomenal increase in the volume of gold." We did not want an increase in the volume of gold as much as we wanted an increase in the volume of confidence.

Mr. BURLESON. I am sorry the gentleman can not understand the force of the suggestions I have made. I am not responsible for the fact that he does not.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. What was contended by Mr. Bryan and other gentlemen in 1896 was that there could not be any prosperity——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; I do not want to yield now. I want to say that the entire Democratic contention was wrapped up in that statement which I have just read, made by Mr. Bryan, and there has never been any kind of a vindication of the truth of any feature of that statement. There might have been Democratic contention that we did not have enough gold in this country, enough money to redeem other money, but I contend that what has transpired since has shown that claim to be fallacious.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection——

Mr. RAINEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not; and I ask the protection of the Chair. Mr. Chairman, the answer that I just made to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that we have prosperity, that prosperity is a fact and that everybody knows it to be a fact, reminds me of the impression made upon my mind in the older, and in some respects, the better days. When I was a child we had in our home readings from the Holy Scriptures. There was nothing that made so great an impression on my mind as did the story of Christ's healing the blind man. You will recall that when the man from Nazareth came out of the temple he saw a man who had been blind from his birth. And he was asked who had sinned—the blind man or his parents? The good man replied that neither of them had sinned. And he gathered clay and annointed the man's eyes and told him to go wash in the Pool of Siloam. And he did as directed, and he came back seeing. And the neighbors and they that before had seen him that was blind said, "Is not this he that sat and begged?" Some said, "This is he," others said, "He is like him," but he said, "I am he."

And they brought to the Pharisees him that aforesaid was blind, and the Pharisees asked him how he had received his sight, and he said: "He put clay upon my eyes, and I washed, and I do see."

But the Jews would not believe that he had been blind and had received his sight, and they went to the parents of him that had received his sight. And they asked them: "Is this your son who you say was born blind? How then doth he now see?"

And his parents replied: "We know that this is our son and that he was born blind. But by what means he now seeth we know not, or who hath opened his eyes we know not; he is of age, ask him. He shall speak for himself." These words spoke the parents because they feared the Jews, for the Jews had agreed already that if any man confessed Him, the Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue. Therefore, said his parents, "He is of age, ask him."

Then again they called the man that was blind and said unto him, "Give God the praise. We know that this man is a sinner," referring to Christ.

The blind man answered and said: "Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not. One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, I now see." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, one thing I know, and that is that under the Democratic party and its free-trade theories we have been poor and idle and wretched and our national Treasury empty, while under the Republican policy of protection we have employed capital and labor, our people have been happy, and our national Treasury has been filled to overflowing. [Applause on Republican side.] And as neither the blind man nor his parents had sinned, possibly neither the Democratic party nor their theory of revenue sinned. The condition of the blind man gave the Son of Man the opportunity to demonstrate his supernatural power, and who knows but what everything combined from 1893 to 1897 to bring about a condition of affairs that would give opportunity for the splendid policy of protection to demonstrate its virtue and strength and power? One thing we do know, and that is that whereas we were blind we now see. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] And against that one supreme fact you will not be able to contend with your theories in this next campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]—the picture maker—that I have some pictures here that I wish he would investigate. They are pictures which were taken under the Democratic Administration in 1894 by Harper's Weekly and scattered throughout the length and breadth of this land as an index to the conditions that then existed as a result of the threatened policy for which you now contend. Here is a picture of General Coxey and his army marching to Washington to demand $500,000,000 to be expended on the public roads. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to this: That they did not want that $500,000,000 given to them in cold cash; they wanted it expended on the public roads. They did not want it for nothing; they wanted an opportunity to work for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

They came down here and surrounded this Capitol. They were photographed by the Harper's Weekly artist. They begged on bended knee that you give them some relief. The mere anticipation of your legislation had been sufficient to warn business to trim sail to meet the coming storm.

Here is another picture that I would call the gentleman's attention to. It is called "At Work in a Woodyard." How would the gentleman from Illinois like to add that to his collection? [Laughter.]

Underneath is this legend:

Four thousand four hundred and eighty-seven married men took advantage of this opportunity to earn 50 cents.

Under the good old Democratic Administration of Grover Cleveland, the only Democratic Administration, thank God, we have had in fifty years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Here is another picture, and it is labeled "Unemployed in Boston."

Twelve thousand unemployed workingmen march to Boston statehouse and demand employment.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois these men did not go to the Boston statehouse as beggars. They went to the Boston statehouse and asked for work. They were willing to toil. There was naught for them to do.

I have traveled all over New England with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] during the last three years. I want to say to you that New England is to-day one continuous hive of industry. Work for everybody. "All kinds of work for all kinds of men." They have added to their mills; they have added to their factories during the last ten years. Millions have come out in additional production during the last ten years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

New England comes down here, represented by whom? The Democratic ex-governor and a Democratic capitalist by the name of Whitney. And they whine around these corridors, because there is an infinitesimal duty on hides that they allege increases the price of manufacturing a pair of shoes a fraction of a cent. Shame on New England! Whitney and Douglas and men of that character do not represent the real business sentiment of New England. They want the tariff taken off coal and iron ore. I am told that Mr. Whitney owns coal lands and iron lands in Nova Scotia, and he wants to bring in his coal free of duty and he wants to bring in his iron ore free of duty, and when he does that he gives a preference to Nova Scotian labor over American labor, and the Republican party will not permit that. [Loud applause.]

Here is another picture. It is labeled "Charity in Boston." And then follow these words:

The short and simple annals of the poor have never been perused so closely, and the men who apply are men that have been industrious and men with families.

And so I might go on; and I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that these pictures to which I have just called attention represent your policy. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the gentleman give me the exact date of those pictures?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will give you the pictures.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not asking for the pictures, but the dates.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I have another copy, and I am going to have copies of these pictures made by the hundred, and present one to every Democrat on the floor of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not asked the gentleman for the pictures. I have no doubt they are very gruesome. I remember something of that kind. I have asked the gentleman to give me the dates.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The dates are on the pictures. Now, I would say to the gentleman from Mississippi that these pictures show what would be the daily workings of your policy, as you definitely stated it on the floor of this House a few days ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will permit me just one further question. I have not had time to examine these, but the first one is a picture of General Coxey and his army here, and a first-rate picture, too, because I saw it here myself. [Laughter.] It is dated May 12, 1894. Now, will the gentleman mind telling me his recollection as to what tariff act was in effect at that time?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not recollect; I do not care.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I do. I recollect that it was the McKinley Act, and the Wilson-Gorman Act had not yet been passed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In other words, as I understand the gentleman from Mississippi, you had not done anything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had not done anything on the tariff; but God knows you had done a plenty [applause on the Democratic side], and the people were reaping the full harvest at that moment.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And we happened to come in before the full fruits were dissipated.

Mr CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi, I would say it makes no difference whether the Democratic tariff bill had passed at that time or whether it had not; the people knew what was coming. The Democratic party had served notice on the factories of this country about what they should expect, and they were getting ready for the destructive work. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, the gentleman will pardon me a question further.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the effect of your coming into power, the fact that you were coming into power——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman perfectly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS (continuing). Was sufficient to throw the country into a condition of demoralization.

You had served notice that you were going to make war on the "protected factory lord," as you called the manufacturer; that you were going to cut down the tariff. Some of you had said that you were going to absolutely destroy the custom-houses. This meant but one thing to the manufacturer, and that was that he would in all probability have to meet the European manufacturer in the American market on the basis of a product manufactured by cheap labor without any tariff to represent the difference between American labor and European labor.

The man who owned and operated the American factory knew he could not pay twice or three times the wages paid by the man who owned and operated the European factory and compete with him. So the American manufacturer decided to wait and see what the Democratic tariff regulators were going to do, and he closed his factory; and when he closed his factory he threw his employees out of work; and when these people were thrown out of work they did not have any money; and when they did not have any money they could not pay their taxes, and thousands of them lost their homes; and they could not pay their rent and tens of thousands of them had to tramp; and they could not buy the products of the farm, as they did when the factory was running, and that made it hard for the farmer; and they could not build or improve their homes and that hurt the bricklayer and carpenter and stone mason and painter and paper hanger and plumber; they could not buy shoes and clothing, and that crippled the shoe dealer and the merchant; and they could not buy groceries, and that bankrupted the grocer; neither did they have money for the preacher nor the doctor nor the music teacher, and that made it bad all around—hard times, hard times, hard times. It all came from the closed factory, and the factory was closed by the Democratic threat to cut the throat of the protective tariff.

I say that panic commenced taking form the day after the election, because for years you had asserted that if you ever got in power you would dig up and destroy the last root of protection. You had condemned them in your platforms and on the stump, and when you secured control of Congress and the Presidency they knew you were in position to pass sentence, and they commenced to prepare for the day of execution. You pleadingly cry, "Why, the panic came before we did anything." Yes, but you had announced what you intended doing the moment you got in. You might as well contend that a man sentenced to death should be light-hearted and gay during the weeks preceding the hanging on the theory that nothing had yet been done to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman's contention——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Because you had threatened that the minute you got into power you would put the knife to the throat of business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the gentleman's contention perfectly, namely, that the mere expectation of Democratic government caused the panic.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. That is it exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that contention perfectly. Now, I want to ask the gentleman these two short questions, and I will couple them.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I trust the gentleman will be expeditious.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I am not going to take any great length of time.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Well, go on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One question is this, What caused the panic at that same time and immediately preceding it in Canada, Australia, Austria, and Great Britain? and the next is whether that was the apprehension of Democratic success in those parts of the world? and the next question is whether it was the apprehension of Democratic success in 1890 and 1891 and 1892 which had deprived the corn farmers of this country and the cotton farmers of this country of any price for their production at which they could get out of debt or make a living?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say to the gentleman, in answer to those questions, that I do not know anything about the price of cotton at that time, but I do know about the price of corn. The gentleman stated on the floor of this House a short time ago that in 1890 and 1891 and 1892 the farmers of the West burned their corn for fuel. They did not do anything of the kind in those years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, they did in 1890.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. In 1891.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In 1891 they were burning their corn for fuel, it was so cheap; and that is not only true, but General Weaver, representing the agrarian and populistic spirit of this country, had gathered his audiences, not by the thousands but by the acres, in such absolute desperation were they, catching at straws for salvation, and the whole South, rock ribbed in its Democracy, came very near going to populism out of pure destitution.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, that he can make any statement he pleases about cotton, but I assert now that his statement with reference to corn in 1890, 1891, and 1892 is not true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say in 1890 and 1891 and 1892, all during the entire time——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I wish the gentleman would not take up all my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the gentleman has challenged my statement, and of course he wants to get my statement accurately.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. You say it is true, and I have denied it. Now you produce your evidence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I say is that at that time corn was so cheap and wheat was so cheap that the people were not making a dollar upon the farm, and were getting worse and worse in debt, and that during that period, either in the latter part of 1890 or during the year 1891, the farmers of Kansas were burning corn.

Now, the gentleman asks me to produce the evidence upon the spot. Of course he knows I can not, except my recollection of the facts, but I will leave it, whether that is true or not, to any Representative from the State of Kansas, and let him deny it and go to his people as a man of honor with a denial of the statement upon his lips.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. HINSHAW. I did not have the fortune to live in Kansas, but I lived just across the line in Nebraska in 1890, and I know that the statement the gentleman makes is not true. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I, like the gentleman from Mississippi, stood on the steps of the Senate and saw Coxey's army march up here, and he states that the date was May 12, 1894.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say that is the date at which this photograph says it was taken.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Very well. I say that the Wilson bill had passed the House of Representatives on February 1, 1894, and so far as the Democratic policy had been expressed, it had been in operation three months and twelve days. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Here is a copy of the bill, and I will show the gentleman the bill he voted for, which is entirely different from the bill which was ultimately passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman must not make me appear to have made a statement which I did not make. I did not undertake to give the date. I merely undertook to give the date of this photograph, and I presumed it was correct. If not, I am not to blame.

Mr. REEDER. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I should like to state that I am from Kansas and have lived in the corn belt of Kansas for many years, and that during the years mentioned by the gentleman from Mississippi no corn was burned to my knowledge in any part of Kansas.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman from Mississippi is mistaken in his dates. No corn was burned for fuel, by sane people, until the Democratic party came into power and made it so cheap that it was not worth hauling to market. And at the same time they made wheat so cheap that it was fed to hogs. I insist that an investigation of market reports will bear out my contention.

If the gentleman from Mississippi will scan the Democratic newspapers back in the nineties he will discover that we had good times up to the very date of the election in 1892. The Indianapolis Sentinel was the Democratic organ in Indiana. Under a Washington date line we find the following dispatch in that Democratic paper under date of July 28, 1891:

The Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department has to-day issued a summary statement and review of the foreign commerce and immigration of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891. The statement says that the total value of the commerce of the past fiscal year was the greatest in the history of the Government and exceeded the total value of the commerce of 1890 by the sum of $82,191,803. The commerce of 1890 was the largest for any year in the history of the Government up to that time, exceeding the commerce of the prior year by the sum of $159,606,063. Our total commerce during the past fiscal year amounted to $1,729,330,898.

And in that same Democratic paper, on January 1, 1892, are the following headlines to a voluminous report on the business of the last year:

A GLORIOUS YEAR HAS BEEN EXPERIENCED BY INDIANAPOLIS—SHE HAS BEEN PROSPEROUS AND REASONABLY HAPPY—HER BUSINESS HAS GROWN IN ALL DIRECTIONS AND ALL HER INTERESTS HAVE THRIVED.

And the same date, January 1, 1892, we find the following editorial in this same Democratic newspaper:

Looking back over the field of commercial and industrial effort in this great bustling capital city of the Hoosier Commonwealth during the past twelve months, every citizen of Indianapolis and the State at large may reasonably feel gratified at the present healthful condition of business in general and the substantial progress which has been made in almost every avenue of effort where the hand of enterprise has been at work. One has only to refer to the reports of the commercial agencies to learn that the business operations here have been generally attended during the year 1891 with results, which in the light of comparison with those of the twelve months preceding, show a most satisfactory increase, the same being true of the returns from invested capital in every direction.

And coming on down to within thirty days of that fatal election, October 1, 1892, we find this same Democratic newspaper publishing from the report of R. G. Dun & Co. as follows:

Business continues larger than ever at this time of the year. The commercial sky is without a cloud. Money is everywhere in ample supply, and collections have rarely been more generally satisfactory.

Ah, gentlemen, you are mistaken in the date. Times were good until your threat wrecked them.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for one minute?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will get the gentleman's time extended.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that after I conclude my address I will yield to any or all of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber, to an unlimited extent, to ask any questions that may be asked along the line they are proceeding.

As I was saying when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Mississippi, the pictures to which I called the attention of this House are the pictures which are the logical conclusion of the policy which you definitely declared was your policy in preference to this policy under which we are now operating just a few days ago when you used these words. And while I do not presume the country will pay the attention to me that it would to the gentleman on the other side of the Chamber who so frequently calls its attention, yet owing to the conspicuous position which the gentleman from Mississippi occupies in the Democratic party I sincerely trust that these words will be sent all over this broad land in order that the country may know what to expect in case the Democratic party comes into power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I decline to yield.

[Mr. WILLIAMS continued to address the gentleman from Indiana and the Chairman.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order, that when the gentleman is called to order it is his place to take his seat, and I demand that the gentleman from Mississippi take his seat.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point that the Chair should order the stenographer to leave out the remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi after the gentleman from Indiana declined to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter will leave out of the report any remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi after the gentleman from Indiana declined to yield.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, I was calling the attention of the country to the specific statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi in a speech which he delivered on the floor of the House a few days ago, when he said:

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have written what follows for a few sentences, because I have wanted to measure my words right here when I say I would rather live in a country that taxes my property directly—houses and lands and cattle and poll—and pays out the proceeds directly once a week from the subtreasuries to all needy laborers working at less than a given wage—supposed to be a living wage—than to live under the present system. I would rather do it for two reasons: First, because I would know exactly how much I was paying, and now I do not; and, secondly, because I would know exactly who was getting what I paid in, and now I do not. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I know quite well who does not get overmuch of it—the laborer—the pretended beneficiary.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that a bolder statement was never made on the floor of this House in a tariff discussion than that. The gentleman, leader of the minority, speaking for the Democracy, comes out boldly and says that in preference to the present prosperous condition of this country, as we now have it, he would prefer a system that would give us organized national mendicancy all over the Union. Every Saturday night, if the gentleman from Mississippi had his way about it, people who are underpaid would walk to Democratic box offices, where charity would be doled out to them and to their children for the seven days and nights that followed. In Great Britain and Ireland it is said there are 13,000,000 underpaid men, women, and children. There would be, under the same system, more than that number in this country—30,000,000 underpaid men, women, and children walking to Democratic charity offices every Saturday night and getting their weekly stipend! That is a party indorsement of national mendicancy; that is a party indorsement of national beggary; that is a welcome party recognition of national want and despair; that is Democracy as we knew it under the last Democratic Administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You had it in 1894 and 1895 and 1896 just that way. We had it in Indianapolis; we were taxed in Indiana to pay underpaid and illy-fed men and women and children; we were taxed directly and they were paid by the million all over this land. I want to say to you that we prefer to have this money go into the hands of the people through the factories and into the national treasury through the custom-houses of this Republic. [Applause on the Republican side.] The factory is a Republican institution. You can adopt the almshouse as a Democratic institution if you like. [Applause on the Republican side.] We prefer that these people earn the money with which they buy their food, and that they subsist, not at the hands of national charity. If a Democrat is elected President of the United States in 1908, which God forbid, I shall advocate that there be established in accordance with the gentleman's plan a new department of Government to be known as the Department of Beggary and Want, and I shall circulate a petition asking the Democratic President to honor the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] with the first appointment to that new department. [Applause on the Republican side.] He would then be at liberty to proceed to organize his division of bankruptcy and his bureaus of idleness, destitution, and despair.

We have always had these hard-times bureaus under low-tariff administrations. Why have we had them? Because our labor would not work at the wage given foreign labor. The work hence went abroad, our labor went into idleness, and our money went abroad to pay for manufactured goods.

Abraham Lincoln made the best tariff speech ever recorded when he said:

> I do not know much about the tariff, but I know this much, when we buy manufactured goods abroad we get the goods and the foreigner gets the money. When we buy the manufactured goods at home we get both the goods and the money.

That is the whole protective theory in a nutshell. Up to the enactment of the McKinley law we sent $20,000,000 abroad each year for tin plate. We got the tin plate and Great Britain got the $20,000,000.

Last year, and indeed for several years, we made in our own factories all the tin plate we consumed. In other words, under our policy, Lincoln's policy and McKinley's policy, we got both the tin plate and the money—the American consumer got the tin plate and the American laborer and American manufacturer got the money. And the price of tin plate did not advance.

The draining of this country of money, which is the case under low-tariff laws, is what makes it poor and weak. The gold and silver of a nation is its lifeblood. Take it away by the million to pay for goods manufactured abroad and you sap our nation's strength, just as you sap an individual's strength if you tap an artery. Under a low Democratic tariff we send away our money—our blood. Under a Republican protective tariff we are getting new blood all the time, because, as a rule, the balance of trade is in our favor. Read the messages of our Presidents back in the fifties and you will see that they tell how, under the low Walker tariff, the millions of gold mined in California went in one ceaseless current abroad to pay for manufactured goods. We are now keeping that gold, the nation's lifeblood, at home where it belongs.

In speaking of having both the tin plate and the money that went into its manufacture under the policy of protection, I called attention to the fact that the price of tin plate was, at the same time, no higher to the consumer. American inventive skill and genius and competition always come to the rescue when the American manufacturer and American laborer are given a chance by the protective tariff. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] contends that the price of the article that is manufactured, if protected by the tariff, is always higher. This assertion is absolutely without foundation. Inventive genius and competition almost invariably reduce the price. Our experience with wire nails shows how it works and explodes absolutely Mr. WILLIAMS's theory. In 1883 there were no wire nails produced in this country. They were then selling at $6 a keg. We manufactured that year 50,000 kegs, when a tariff of $4 a keg was placed upon wire nails. In 1884 we manufactured 75,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $5 a keg. In 1885 we manufactured 200,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $4 a keg, which was exactly the tariff duty. In 1886 we manufactured 500,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $3.40 a keg. In 1887 we manufactured 700,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $3.30 a keg. In 1888 we manufactured 2,000,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $2.60 a keg. In 1889 we made over 2,500,000 kegs, and the price dropped to $2.10 a keg. And all this time the duty was $4 per keg. The average price in 1902, the last available report, was $2.15.

That is an excellent illustration of the way Republican protection works. It is exactly the same as the working of the McKinley tariff on tin plate, which built up the tin-plate industry from nothing to an aggregate value of $20,000,000 a year.

Republican protection not only protects, it builds up. It gives employ to American workmen. It secures to Americans the control of the markets of their own country. It affords to American labor a standard of wages far above the wages of any other people under the sun.

But, you ask, why keep the tariff on if wire nails are selling for less than the tariff?

I answer you that we must keep the tariff on to protect this country from being made a dumping ground for the surplus products of the nail mills of all the other countries on earth.

We needed the protective tariff, first, to enable us to build the factory. Now that we have the factory running, we need a protective tariff to protect the American market and the laborer who is working in this American factory; and we will continue to need it until the American laborer is willing to work for the low wages paid the foreign laborer. To my mind nothing is clearer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to give attention to this contention of Democracy that goods are sold abroad by American manufacturers cheaper than they are sold at home. They think that they have discovered a gold mine, a party gold mine, and they think that they are going to throw the American people into a condition of hysteria by going among them and shouting that the American manufacturer is a plunderer and a robber because he is selling his goods abroad cheaper than he is selling them at home—a condition of hysteria similar to that into which they threw the country in 1892, which brought upon us that visitation of Democratic rinderpest thirteen years ago. [Laughter.] American manufacturers selling abroad cheaper than at home, the Democrats say! How does that harmonize with their prophecy made in 1897, that if the Dingley bill became a law it would build a stone wall around this country and absolutely destroy our export trade? They admit now that notwithstanding that bill became a law our manufactured exports have increased beyond any former period, and they shout to the country, "Why, they are selling abroad cheaper than they are selling at home."

Mr. Chairman, I say to you that that contention, which I do not deny, is to my mind the highest tribute that can be paid to the Dingley law. [Applause on the Republican side.] Under this Dingley law, which started all the factories that Democracy closed, we have builded thousands and tens of thousands of additional factories, and we have put them all into commission. We are consuming 92 per cent of all the products that they manufacture, and in addition to that we are meeting in the open market of the world all the manufacturers of Christendom, and we are underselling them—glory be it to the American name and to the Dingley law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I want the gentleman from Mississippi, and the Democratic party generally, to get a little light on our trade relations and how it has been possible to make the conquests we have made. The gentleman from Mississippi read from the report of the Industrial Commission recently, but he read only that part of the report as suited his argument. I commend these words from that Commission to him, found on page 626 of volume 19:

> One of the gratifying conditions of the last few years is the very rapid increase in the export trade of the United States. This increase is a matter of congratulation, not merely because of the evidence that it furnishes of the increasing industrial strength and prosperity of the country, but because it furnishes the means for keeping the country well supplied with the gold needed as a part and basis of our currency and a ready means of settling our indebtedness abroad. Though nearly 65 per cent of our exports are agricultural products, which the combinations affect only slightly, the increase in the exports of manufacturers has doubtless been promoted by the great industrial combinations. With plenty of capital at hand, they have been better able than small concerns to send agents into foreign countries to study conditions, to open up branch factories tributary to the home factories, and in other ways to extend their trade. In many instances such trade could not have been secured by smaller establishments whose strength had to be expended in competition at home.

And, after the gentleman from Mississippi gets through digesting those words, I would respectfully call his attention to the following, on the same page, in the same volume:

In order to gain and hold foreign trade it has occasionally been necessary for both combinations and individual exporters to make low prices to foreign purchasers. It is in evidence before the Commission that even within this country the more distant markets receive concessions in price. In about 20 per cent of the cases covered by the Commission's returns the export prices have ruled lower than those charged to home consumers. Sometimes merely surplus stocks have been unloaded upon the foreign markets. At other times, when the home demand has slackened somewhat, it has been possible to keep manufacturing establishments employed to their full capacity and most productive efficiency only by finding a foreign market for a part of the product, and that could be done best by cutting prices.

Among the reasons given by manufacturers in their admission that prices of their goods in the foreign markets are made lower than in the domestic market, are these: To meet foreign competition; to work off surplus product; to secure a permanent foreign market; taking a less price for cash as against credit transactions at home; to offset foreign duties and foreign transportation charges, which the buyer has to pay; to allow for rebates in duties which foreign material has to pay, and to match the more stable conditions of foreign markets as against the fluctuations of the home market.

The practice is quite common in all countries, and on the part of the separate establishments as well as of combinations. Were this plan not adopted, it would often be necessary to run the plant only part of the time, which would not merely throw a portion of the laborers out of employment, but would also add materially to the cost of production of the remaining product. It is probable, therefore, that when the export prices have been at cost, the result has been, by keeping the plant fully employed, to hold the prices to American consumers lower than would have been possible otherwise.

Could anything be plainer than that? Why did not the gentleman from Mississippi read these words when he read from this volume a few days ago? Simply because they destroyed his theory.

Selling abroad cheaper than at home! That is a principle of business that is followed by every business man in the United States and every manufacturing nation on earth. Come with me to Indianapolis and I will show you advertisements in the daily newspapers that show that the business men in that city have organized and have a regular office, where they pay a sum of money covering the railroad fare of all people living within a certain distance of Indianapolis, if they will only come to Indianapolis and buy goods to a certain amount. [Applause on the Republican side.] In other words, the business men of Indianapolis are selling abroad in Indiana cheaper than they are selling at home. It is a principle of business, and the gentlemen on the other side of this House would understand it if they knew anything about business. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I say now that there is not a manufacturing nation on earth that does not pursue this policy.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No. I regret to decline, but I have not the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who bears down so strongly on this one proposition, that it has been established by investigation that Germany, Great Britain, Belgium, France, Australia, and every other manufacturing country on earth has two prices, one the home price and the other the export price, and the home price is from $5 to $7 higher on steel rails, for instance, than is the export price; and in some cases, notably in Germany, on goods for export the Government gives a freight rate of 66⅔ per cent off; and in addition to that, on some of those goods the German Government gives a bounty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Take steel rails: Great Britain's home price is $31.50 per ton, while her export price is $25 per ton. Germany's home price is $30 and her export price $24. France's home price is $31 and her export price $25.50. Austria-Hungary's home price is $31 and her export price is $25.50. Belgium's home price is $30 and her export price is $24. United States home price is $28 and her export price from $25 to $26. The Democratic party has been longing for the markets of the world for many years. The Dingley law has placed us in a condition where they confess that we are capturing the markets of the world. We can not capture the markets of the world without selling as good goods and at as cheap a price as are offered by other manufacturing nations. By the Democratic policy we will not only be unable to enter the markets of the world, but we would surrender our home market by lowering the tariff wall, and that would convert New England into a tramp yard, empty the National Treasury, and bring again a condition of individual and national insolvency such as we experienced in 1894. [Applause.]

I would respectfully call attention to this table, which tells its own story. It is a comparison of present f. o. b. mill prices, domestic and export, on iron and steel in the principal producing countries:

Country.	Rails.		Billets.		Structural, including shapes, plates, bars, angles, and tees.
	Home price.	Export price.	Home price.	Export price.	Home price.	Export price.
Great Britain	$31.50	$25.00	$24.00	.....	$1.60	$1.35
Germany	30.00	24.00	27.00	$20.00	1.50	1.25
France	31.00	25.50	27.00	20.50	1.65	1.45
Austria-Hungary	31.00	25.50	27.00	22.00	1.50	1.35
Belgium	30.00	24.00	27.00	19.50	1.55	1.35 to 1.40
United States	28.00	25.00 to 26.60	24.00 to 27.00	21.00	1.60 to 1.70	1.40 to 1.50

I would say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that, as compared with other nations from the standpoint of home price and export price, our home price is always smaller and our export price is as large or larger than any other manufacturing nation on earth. [Applause on the Republican side.] Selling manufactured products abroad cheaper than at home! Why, does not the gentleman know that the Treasury Department every day of its existence has trouble at the New York and Philadelphia custom-houses because of the invoices presented there, those invoices being so far below the price prevailing in the countries where these goods are bought? The importers of New York City and Philadelphia have a regular force of clerks whose business it is to attend the custom-house and revise invoices in order to bring them up from the actual price paid for the foreign goods to the domestic price that prevails in the country where they are purchased; and the gentlemen on the other side of this House, if they knew anything about the business of running the Government, would know that.

Mr. Chairman, two years ago I received a letter from a steel mill in my district asking me to go to the Secretary of the Treasury and see if I could not have refunded about $30,000 which they claimed was excesss duty paid on an importation of steel billets from Germany. I went to the Treasury Department. They refused to do it on the ground that my constituent had purchased his goods in Germany cheaper than the German manufacturer sold the same goods to the German customer. The duty was collected upon the basis of the price prevailing in Germany, not on the actual price paid. The proprietor of that Indiana mill told me that he bought that consignment of steel billets in Germany, had it freighted across the ocean and then one-third across the continent to Indiana, and laid down at the door of his factory cheaper than the German manufacturer of steel billets would sell them to his own customers in Germany.

That is what Germany does to get into Indiana. That is what all manufacturing nations are doing to get into the United States. That is an answer to your cry that we are selling abroad cheaper than at home. Every other manufacturing nation on earth does it to get into a foreign market and to get a dumping ground for its surplus. Some of them are able to do it to a greater extent than others, because there is often a rebate on raw material imported and then exported in the manufactured product. And if every other country on earth that manufactures is encouraged in this work, why should we object to our manufacturers doing the same thing? I am told that only 30 cents in every $1,000 worth of products exported represents the goods that are sold abroad cheaper than at home. Our manufactured product last year amounted to $14,000,000,000. What a dignified, what a mighty, contention!

Why, Mr. Chairman, when I was at Waterloo, Iowa, two years ago I saw a heating system by which gasoline was converted into gas and conducted into burners and grates and into the cooking stoves. They manufactured the plant in that town, and I went to the establishment and looked it over and asked the man what he would charge to come to Delphi, Ind., and install a plant in my house. He had put a plant in the home of the gentleman who accompanied me to the factory and charged him $150. I told him my house had the same number of rooms. He told me he would come to Indiana, pay his own expenses, and put in the same plant for $125, "because," said he, "I want to extend my business to Indiana."

My Waterloo companion said: "That is business." He did not run out and get hold of the rope to the fire bell and ring it and summon the citizens of Waterloo. [Laughter on the Republican side.] He did not say: "Burn down this factory; drive this man out of this community. He is selling abroad cheaper than he is selling at home." He mildly said: "That is business." He knew that that meant more orders for the factory, and he knew that more orders meant more labor in the factory, and he knew that more labor in the factory meant more money paid out in Waterloo, and he was anxious to get that business just as every loyal, patriotic American ought to be anxious to get the business of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, we have an advantage of these other manufacturing nations in the personnel of the people who work in the factories and in the mines. Our people are quicker, they are keener, they are more alert, theirs is the genius of initiative, and I confess to you, Mr. Chairman, that there are victories in peace and triumphs in commerce that excite my pride and admiration just as much as conquests in time of war. I shall never forget how my heart throbbed and how my soul leaped when a few years ago I saw that an American bridge company had put up a structure across a chasm in India under circumstances and conditions that attracted the attention of the civilized world. The work had to be done in a few months. Lord Curzon cabled to Great Britain, told them what had to be done, and asked them if they could do it. The British manufacturers dropped their hands and gasped, "Impossible, impossible." Lord Curzon cabled to Germany, and the German bridge builders dropped their hands and gasped, "Impossible, impossible." Then he cabled to a bridge company in the United States and in an incredibly short space of time a cablegram was sent back: "Yes; we will build your bridge and give bond for its completion on time." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The bridge was built; the bridge was completed on time, and it stands over there in far India a monument to American genius, a monument to American skill, and a triumph of American industry. Those locomotives and cars that go from St. Petersburg to distant Manchuria—they are American locomotives and they are American cars. Great God, do you suppose that they were sold abroad cheaper than they were sold at home! I know not. It is enough for me to know that they wear the imperial stamp of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] That locomotive that pulls the Japanese Imperial Express at the rate of 60 miles an hour out of Tokyo—do you suppose it was sold abroad cheaper than at home? I know not; neither do I care. It is enough for me to know that it came from an American shop. Take those drills that go a mile deep down into the mountains in East Africa—do you suppose they were sold abroad cheaper than at home? I know not; neither do I care. It is enough for me to know that they were made in Pittsburg and the labor was paid for by good American money. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And I confess to you, Mr. Chairman, that I look with contempt—I would, if I did not look with pity—upon those men who would put detectives and spies upon the tracks of every American manufacturer. I am proud of bridge building triumphs and locomotive building triumphs in the markets of the world. I hail with joy and pride that spirit that leads an American manufacturer to wrest a prize from competitors. It is the same spirit that filled John Paul Jones when, commanded to surrender his ship by the officer on the Serapis, replied, "I will not surrender; I have just begun to fight." [Applause.] And he went into port on the vessel of the enemy. This ambitious manufacturing spirit is the same spirit in commerce that filled the breast of Dewey eight years ago when he went into the harbor of Manila. I admire that spirit in commerce as I admire it in war, and I am for the American manufacturer who can capture the foreign market, and I do not care whether he sells his goods abroad cheaper than at home; I do not care if he gives his goods away to the foreigner in order to get the market and extend our trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I have imposed upon this House too long; but with your kind indulgence, I will say that the best evidence of American prosperity is the tribute that is paid this nation by the people of other nations who come here year after year to make this country of ours their home. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]—I regret that he is not here—denounces this policy of protection as a "policy of public plunder," and recently he stated that it was "the fountain source of all corruption," and that it had resulted in "the total demoralization of the American Republic." I deny that allegation. There is not a poor but ambitious emigrant who has landed in this country in the last ten years that will not refute that allegation. More than 1,000,000 of them came to us last year.

Mr. Chairman, I think that one of the most impressive sights I ever witnessed was in Chicago three years ago. I was standing at the iron gate about to go to my train when the conductor came to me and told me to stand and observe. I did as he requested, and soon there commenced passing by a stream of humanity. Two trains had come from New York bearing immigrants. As I stood there, they passed by. There were old people, some of them so old that they had to be helped along by those they loved. There were married people, with troops of little children, each one of them bearing a bundle. Then there were young men and women whom I could tell were alone, carrying in their hands purses that represented the contributions of their families, and in their hearts the hopes and ambitions of generations of those who had gone before. Not one of them could speak the English language—not one. They were from northern Sweden; they were from northern Germany, fair-haired and blue-eyed.

After the last of them had passed, the conductor came to me and asked me what I thought of it. I could not tell him, for while I had been watching I had been thinking, and something had come up into my throat that robbed me of the power of speech. This thought came to me: Here are twelve hundred people, not one of whom has ever had a chance. For generations they and those before them have been hewers of wood and subscribers to the theory that the "king rules by divine right." But deep down in their hearts was implanted the ambition to better their condition. They studied, they inquired, they investigated. I pictured them taking the globe that represents the map of the world and turning it until it came to the United States. And then they put a finger down and said, "That is the place; that is the country; that is the United States. That is where our boy has gone; that is the country to which our daughter has gone; that is the country where everybody has a chance; that is the country to which we will go." [Loud applause.]

I thought of them the night before they left their native land, going to the window and looking out on the mountains that represented the traditions and legends of generations, and on the cemetery that held the dust of their beloved dead, and then kneeling and praying for strength—and then coming, coming to the United States, coming to your country and to mine. I had seen twelve hundred of them who had come, and when they came, it seems to me, they said to the whole world that your country and mine is the best country on earth in which to build a home and rear a family. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] moves that the gentleman be permitted to continue for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that a million people from other countries coming here during the last twelve months is a refutation of that allegation made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I brand it as a slander; I denounce it as a calumny. [Applause.] This is the best country on earth, and not the worst country on earth [applause]; and if I thought about it as the gentleman from New York, I would resign my seat in this House, sell out my belongings, and move to some other country that was nearer in harmony with my political notions. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, three years ago I was invited to a city in southern Ohio to deliver an address on Memorial Day. Soon after I had arrived there a gentleman came to me and handed me an envelope in which there was a letter. It was faded and worn, but I recognized on the envelope the handwriting of my father. I noticed the badly worn postmark, "Murfreesboro, Tenn.," and the date, as I remember it, 1863. I opened the letter and read it. It was written just after the battle of Stone River. It was written by my father to my Uncle Jacob, who up to that time had lost three sons in the Union Army. This letter told him of the finding of the body of his fourth son on the battlefield the day after the fight. He offered him sympathy as best he could, and closed with these words:

> Uncle Jacob, this will be a severe shock to you, this being the fourth boy that you have given to your country; but in your sorrow you have this consolation: He died fighting for the best country on which the sun has ever shone.

[Applause.]

These words, Mr. Chairman, were words that came from the battlefield. They were the balm that kinship affectionately offered to the heart torn with grief; and, Mr. Chairman, they were true words. This was then the best country upon which the sun had ever shone, although it was being torn with hate and passion. This is now the best country upon which the sun has ever shone.

Those words were true in 1863; they are true in 1906. They have been true every hour since Independence Hall. [Applause.] This country of ours, in its matchless fame, its wealth and its greatness, owes more to the policy of protection championed by Hamilton, and Clay, and Jackson, and Harrison, and McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt than to all other policies of government combined. [Loud applause.] I renew my faith in that policy to-day, at a time when there are "all kinds of work for all kinds of men;" at a time when there is no laborer out of employment, when there is no American who is without hope; at a time when the glory and the majesty of the American Republic is recognized as never before in every nook and corner of Christendom. [Loud and prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 19572. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1906, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 18328. An act to regulate the practice in certain civil and criminal cases in the western district of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15332. An act to incorporate the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution; and

H. R. 14604. An act forbidding the importation, exportation, or carriage in interstate commerce of falsely or spuriously stamped articles of merchandise made of gold or silver or their alloys, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5561. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia,'" approved February 5, 1901;

S. 1476. An act granting certain lands to the town of Tincup, Colo., for cemetery purposes; and

S. 5772. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Harris.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is my misfortune, concerning which, however, I make no complaint, to be forced to follow carefully prepared speeches impromptu, speaking upon the spur of the moment, and under the impulse of the moment, which is not always the wisest counselor that a man can have. I have, however, this consolation, Mr. Chairman, never yet in any argument made by me upon any public question have I consciously been guilty of any unfairness of statement or consciously committed any error about a fact. I have also the consciousness of an abiding conviction in the truth of the things in which I believe, and in the absolute fallacy of the things which I am politically opposing.

If I had needed encouragement upon that question, I would have received it when I heard the gentleman from Indiana, "fair face, with the flowing hair" and an eloquent tongue, devoting himself fanciedly to both sides of the proposition on this question. He said the Republican convention in Indiana will have "a day set apart for oratory and a day set apart for debate," because there was in the Republican field "a basis for oratory and a basis for reasoning both." It seemed to me that he dwelt fondly upon the day set apart as a basis for oratory, and immediately proceeded to illustrate his preference for that day by proving that, if what he says in his speech is anything of an illustration of what is going to occur at the Indiana State Republican convention, it will be a basis for nothing but oratory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And then I felt encouraged, too, when I saw the magnificent reception which an endless concatenation of periods, proving nothing and touching nothing practical or up to present date, met with on the other side of the Chamber, when the gentleman from Indiana took his seat. You would have thought that he had made an argument.

There is not one new thing which he uttered. At that, however, I do not quarrel, because new things generally are not true things. But there is not one true thing which was said formerly by anybody which he has repeated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that in the cooler moments, when that speech is read cold-bloodedly by a man with an intellect, it will be found to be but a repetition of the old, old Republican slogan, "We have prosperity and we have a protective tariff," two propositions which nobody under the sun with ordinary reason and ordinary appreciation of facts either denies or has denied. We have prosperity and we have an earthquake in San Francisco. We have prosperity and we have a bad apple crop. We have prosperity and we have lots of pulmonary afflictions, and the pulmonary affliction and the earthquake and the tariff are about equally shown to be the cause of our prosperity. I compliment the gentleman especially upon two things: First, that he emphasizes the fact that the position which he is going to hold and the proposition which he is going to repeat in the next campaign is this old everlasting fallacy of post hoc ergo propter hoc; that he is going to repeat again, and again, and again, and again, "We have prosperity and we have a protective tariff."

I compliment him because it shows that he is rather a shrewd judge of human nature. There are more suckers caught with that bait, there are more fools whose alleged intellects, through their ears, are tickled with that alleged argument than with any other fallacy in the entire gamut of fallacies and sophisms by which the human race has been victimized. It will be idle with many of them to reply, "Yes, and you had distress and panic, and you had a protective tariff, too, in 1873 and in 1867." It will be idle even to say to many of them—such fools are they—that the panic to which you refer as having come under a Democratic protective tariff came under a Republican protective tariff before the Democratic tariff was enacted, before it came into being, before it could have been the cause of anything, and had reached its worst and passed its acute stage before the Democratic tariff had the opportunity to influence business. A lie forever repeated answers in many respects the purpose and has often the influence on men of truth. There is no doubt about that. But, thank God, as the days roll on, as the lie is repeated more and more and more, its impression becomes weaker and weaker.

The gentleman showed his pictures of Coxey's army and all of those other scenes in that period of distress which we all so well remember—the distress of 1893 and the winter, spring, and early summer of 1894 under the McKinley bill—a period of distress brought on in the minds of all intelligent people in the two then existing schools of thought by one or two things or by both, either by the Republican legislation upon the tariff question in existence and unrepealed when the panic came and until it was virtually over, and in existence and unrepealed during the three or four years preceding the panic, when the agricultural and industrial forces were losing their strength little by little, and when the forces of distress were gathering strength and overwhelming the people. One school of thought taught that it was due to the protective legislation put upon the statute book by the Republican party. Another school of thought, popular with the Republican party when they were fighting Bryan, taught that it was brought on by "lack of confidence" in our money, engendered by the Sherman silver bill, which forced the coinage of 4,000,000 silver dollars a month, and thus led the country, according to them, to lose confidence in the stability of its financial system, and later on in the stability of its industrial system—all leading to panic. A Democratic President who agreed with you on that question, taught in a school pupiled by you and by the great financiers of this country in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago. You Republicans and they took that view of it. The President called a special session of the Fifty-third Congress to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver bill in order first to avert and then to stop the panic. I was here, and you stood across that aisle, and you joined forces with him, and you pled day by day that if we would but repeal one short clause in an American legislative act we would put an end to the panic which was ravaging not only America, but Australia, Austria, Canada, and Great Britain.

I said it was the natural result of overspeculation and was the bursting of industrial and commercial bubbles. I said then of that act as I say now of this, that an American act of legislation can not produce universal prosperity nor universal panic—neither the one nor the other—whether it is an American act concerning a financial question or an American act concerning a tariff question. It may produce an effect confined to America, but not an effect nearly world-wide. And coming to that part of his speech the gentleman showed his pictures, and I asked him if he would give me the date. He sent some of them over. The first one—a picture of "General Coxey and His Army"—was taken May 12, 1894. I presume these pictures were actually taken, and, if so, the dates are correct. "Kelley's Industrial Army," May 5, 1894, and "Work in the Wood Yard," the scene upon which he dwelt so fondly, May 5, 1894. "Unemployed in Boston," March 10, 1894. "Charity in Boston," March 3, 1894; "Out of Work," September 2, 1893, the last nearly a twelve month before the passage of the Wilson-Gorman bill. And then the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] sprang to the rescue of the gentleman from Indiana, and when I had said that these pictures were taken before the Wilson-Gorman Act had become a law—and before it was enacted—and therefore before it could be the cause of anything, he sprang to the front and read the date upon a pamphlet which he held triumphantly in his hand while he read its date. It was the Wilson-Gorman tariff law, and I thought, of course, he was reading the date of the enactment of the law. I went over later and got it from him, and he was reading the date when the original Wilson bill passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will allow me to finish my statement. Although the abundant courtesy which I received from that side of the Chamber this morning would teach me to refuse to yield, and thus to return it in kind, my experience with Republicans is such that I think more is to be gained by permitting them to interrupt than there is to be lost by it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman is quite mistaken in his conclusion. I will repeat my remarks, as they have just come to me from the Official Reporter, without any change in the slightest degree by myself:

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I, like the gentleman from Connecticut, stood on the steps of the Senate and saw Coxey's army march up here, and he states that the date was May 12, 1894.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say that is the date at which this photograph says it (the photograph) was taken.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Very well. I say that the Wilson bill had passed the House of Representatives on February 1, 1894, and so far as the Democratic policy had been expressed, it had been in operation three months and twelve days. Here is a copy of the bill, and I will show the gentleman the bill he voted for, which is entirely different from the bill which was ultimately passed.

Now, there can be no misconception. I presented to the gentleman from Mississippi only the bill as it passed the House of Representatives and was pending in the Senate, and that transaction—the passage of the bill in the House—had occurred three months and twelve days, according to his own statement of the date, before the marching of Coxey's army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman is through. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman rose to his feet; he held in his hand what I thought was an act of Congress, and he doubtless repeated all that he has just read. I have no doubt of it; but in the confusion of the House, with this in his hand, he went on, and the House caught, and I caught, the language, that "so far as Democratic policies were concerned, they had been in operation"—for the time which he gave, whatever it was—"three months." There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not know that it made the impression upon this House that when I had said that these pictures were taken before the Wilson-Gorman bill became a law, that I had committed an error and a misstatement of facts. Then I begged the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] to let me interrupt him, just to explain that, and he would not do it; and then the leader upon the majority side sprang to his feet to protect him, that it might not be done, and then "the sledge hammer of debate," the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], expounded the rules of order that it might not be done. Now, the actual fact is as I have stated it. These photographs were taken in May and some of them in March of 1894 and in September of 1893, and the McKinley bill was upon the statute books and in operation and customs duties were being collected under it, and the Wilson-Gorman bill did not become a law until months afterwards—if I remember right, about the middle of August.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The 27th of August.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Maybe so; all the better for my statement. The latest of these photographs in point of date then was three months before the McKinley Republican tariff was repealed and three months before the hybrid Republican-Democratic Wilson-Gorman Act was passed. This is a chronological fact. Let no man who is both rational and intelligent ever again deny it. When I made the statement that Coxey's army was here in Washington before the Democratic tariff bill was upon the statute books, I made it not merely from recollection of records, but I made it from the fact that I had walked through Coxey's army, and at that very time the Democratic tariff bill was being discussed in the Senate of the United States and had not been passed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not in the habit of making a misstatement of fact, even by error, upon this floor, and I do not like it when I am put in the appearance before the House of having made one, to be deprived of the poor boon of explaining the character of the apparent dispute with me, when really there was no dispute, if all of the words of the gentleman from Connecticut had been heard, as he himself now confesses.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Now that the gentleman has made the qualification I do not desire to ask the question. If he did not hear what I said all those about me heard it, and I will ask him now if it was not a fact——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the gentleman used this language, that "so far as the Democratic policies upon this question were concerned, they had been in operation three months," and they did not go into operation until three months afterwards. A law can not "operate" until it is passed. "Policies" can not "operate" except when molded into law, much less when opposite policies are most strenuously expressed in law and are operating every day in every business transaction.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman is entirely mistaken again. I used no such language.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is the gentleman's language [handing it up].

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I said so far as the policy had been expressed. I distinctly called the gentleman's attention to the fact, showing him the bill, that the bill as finally passed was not the bill I referred to, but that so far as the policy of the Democratic party had been expressed it had been done three months and twelve days before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, Mr. Chairman, that was not the language of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]. His language, and it is there, for he has read it himself, was this, literally, that so far as the policies of the Democratic party had been expressed they had been "in operation" for three months. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, an unenacted law is never "in operation" for three minutes, much less three months, and "policies" never "operate" except by law and administration. What was the gentleman's object in using that language, except to make it appear to the country and to the world that I had made a misstatement as to dates?

I feel a bit encouraged, Mr. Chairman, with the general appearance of things. The debaters of the Republican party have found it necessary to fly to the rescue of this threatened system of protectionism. We hear that there is "no demand for tariff revision." Why so many voices raised against it, then? Again, why shoot buckshot at sparrows? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], the chaste and terse and eloquent essayist of the Republican party, has flown to the assistance of the system, which they say nobody wants to change. The humorist of the party, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], also found it necessary to fly to the assistance of this crumbling system. He was so earnest about it that he became somewhat blasphemous in his defense of it, and yet from my standpoint it was not so blasphemous as it appeared when his utterance first shocked his hearers, when he quoted that part of the Scripture which says, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," and applied it, with an exclamation mark after our Saviour's name, to boarding-house butter and to Democratic arguments upon the tariff question, for he was nearer right, if he had made the comparison and left off the exclamation point, than he dreamed of. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The truth is, Democratic truth on this question is like Jesus Christ in this respect—and without blasphemy I may say of it, as of all truth, that it is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is only fallacy and sophism and pretense that kaleidoscopically change phase and face. We have a recent illustration of that. The other day the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] was upon his feet challenging proof, standing like Ajax, as I said that day, defying the lightning, upon the proposition that American steel rail manufacturers sold abroad cheaper than at home; daring anybody to prove it; and in about two days thereafter he got it so sufficiently proven, not only by me, but by the press of the entire country, that with kaleidoscopic effect to-day the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] springs booted and spurred into the arena and says that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] didn't know what in the dickens he was talking about. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] He says that not only are our manufacturers "doing it all the time," but "everybody is doing it" all over the world. How cunningly, how shrewdly, at any rate, did he fail to furnish the evidence of the fact that there was an export price and a domestic price amongst British manufacturers or in any other free-trade country on articles having no import duties levied upon them!

I am curious to see the RECORD with the information which he says he will place in it. He did prove that Germany, a highly protected country, had one export price and another domestic price, and the other day I admitted that not only Germany had it, but that every other country with a high protective tariff had it, and as one of the vicious results of a vicious system must have it, that the system of protective duties and of bounties always in the long run led to that result, but that it could not exist for any length of time as a habit of trade in countries where imports are free to enter. Now, mark you, I use the words "as a habit of trade," because the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] this morning says that this thing of selling cheaper abroad than at home is with us "a principle of business"—that is to say, a habit of trade. It can not exist in any free country as a principle of business or a habit of trade, for the very simplest reason in the world, to wit, the moment that the home manufacturer would raise his home price above what other manufacturers in other countries could sell at, that moment, or in the time thereafter within which it would take a cablegram to go, the factory to get the goods to the seaside, stevedores to load a ship, the ship to get to Great Britain, a railroad to land the goods from the seashore in the place where this process was going on—within this sum of times, the leviathans of the deep flying from every port of the world to a free market with no gate athwart it to prevent ingress, would be laying down the competing, lower-priced goods at the feet of the would-be extortioner. It could not be kept up for any considerable time. It could not become a "habit of trade." It could not become a "principle" on which to base successful or sane "business." As I said the other day, doubtless proof can be shown that, in particular instances or for a short period, that process has gone on anywhere. I can imagine, for example, a time when there might be a shortage of bagging in the Liverpool market, and when the Liverpool sellers of bagging knew it and knew that it would take a certain length of time to get the jute from the jute fields and have it manufactured into bagging, or to import any bagging from any foreign country where any was in stock, and I can see how, during that time, they would take advantage of the situation and sell to the home market higher than they would sell any stock they might hold abroad, because there was no bagging in the home market or but very little, and there would be perhaps plenty in America or France or Germany. In other words, there would be a temporary scarcity at home. They could take advantage of the situation as long as it lasted, a temporary situation in the home market, but could not take advantage of it in the other markets, because it did not exist. For how long? Until foreign bagging could reach their customers. But that could not be made a "principle of business." It could not go on day by day and hour by hour and night by night and month by month and year by year, as it does in Germany and as it does in the United States, and after a sufficient length of time in all tariff-sheltered and monopolized or partially monopolized markets.

The gentleman very properly says that sometimes it is owing to the fact that a rebate is granted. That is true. Wherever a rebate is granted upon a raw article imported and then afterwards exported as part of a finished product of course the man who gets the rebate can sell just in the amount of the rebate that much cheaper abroad than he can at home. But no free-trade country has the rebate system. There is nothing in the shape of a duty to rebate from. Now, then, it may happen that in Great Britain you will find tobacco sold cheaper abroad than at home, because there is a high tariff on it. You may find that various other things with a high tariff put upon them, and there are some even in England—tobacco is not the only one—will be able to be sold in that way, but you can not take possession of a market open to the world and monopolize it at a sheltered price, for the very simple reason that there is no shelter. The other fellow's goods from the other country meet yours, not handicapped, but in equal race.

Now, let me go on. The gentleman says free trade is in the interest of the foreigner. I shall not stop to run over the everlasting difference between free trade and a tariff for revenue. If there is anybody who has so little sense that he does not understand the distinction, I can not make it plain to him, because I have already used my lungs and my brains to the very utmost stretch of which they are capable in the attempt to make it so plain that a child who was running might read the lesson. But using his words and taking him upon his own ground, he seems to think that the freer the trade is the more it is in the interest of the foreigner. Of course it is in the interest of the foreigner that trade should be free, or even when not absolutely free, freer; and if that were all, the gentleman might appeal to the narrow spirit of chauvinism that taught men in the Middle Ages that whatever was good for the foreigner was necessarily bad for them; that taught the sturdy Briton at home that whenever anything benefited "the frog-eating Frenchman" it must necessarily be a curse to Great Britain, and taught the Frenchmen across the border, facing the chalky cliffs of "perfidious Albion," that anything that could be good for Great Britain must necessarily be bad for France. But if freer trade is good for the foreigner, it is good for him because it removes somewhat the restriction on trade. If it be good for the man at one end of the line to remove the restriction on trade, it is good for the man at the other end of the line to remove the restriction on trade. It is good for the foreigner, but it is also good for us. If free trade were bad and a curse, it is a curse for both parties to the trade. If free trade is a blessing, it is a blessing for both. It blesses him who buys and him who sells—the former buys cheaper, and in consequence the latter sells more. Now, I say that the freer trade can be made in the United States consistently with the need of furnishing an effective government with sufficient revenue the more encouragement there is to commerce to buyer and to seller; the more encouragement there is to selling the more encouragement there is to the man who buys, because he profits by the transaction; the more encouragement there is to buying the more encouragement there is to the man who sells, because he profits by the transaction.

You can not conceive of a sustained system of commercial exchange in the world, unless it be that one of the parties to it is habitually victimized and is a constant, continually rich fool, that is not a benefit to both sides. There is nothing more absurd in the world than to contend that it is the seller alone who makes money by going into business. The buyer also makes money, whether he buys to sell again at a profit or whether he buys something which is cheaper than he can himself make it for his own use; something which he would have to use anyhow, and which, if he did not buy it, would cost him more to make than to buy. When he buys for consumption he buys with the proceeds of something he has made for somebody else's consumption.

Why, the gentleman goes on then and he says that the evidence from 1893 to 1897 was "our evidence"—that is, Democratic evidence. That I have gone into to some extent. We were reaping the awaiting results of Republican legislation. He dwells then upon the last ten years, and he tells us that "ten years is a short period," but "it was time enough for us" to do this and "time enough for us" to do that and "for us" to do the other thing; and while I all the time was thinking he was indulging in a somewhat florid but rather eloquent flight of oratory in praise of the American people for their boundless energy, their patriotic impulses, their courage upon the field of battle, and their enterprise upon the fields of peace, never dreaming that his "us" and his "we" were not appellations applied to America and our people, but when he got through he said: "Surely this is enough for any one political party in any one campaign." What a "pent-up Utica" bounds his thought! And among those party achievements was the war with Cuba, and, oh, everything else that has taken place. I do not know why he left out the yellow-fever epidemic, the insurance rottenness, or the San Francisco earthquake and the Yazoo City fire, both of which occurred during the same time; but there is not much use in going into that. It is all so puerile.

Next he says that "the people have money." Yes; the people have money. The people have more money per capita now in America than they ever had in the history of the Republic, and that is one reason why they are prosperous, too. They have more money in Canada to-day than they ever had in the history of the Dominion. That is one reason why Canada is more prosperous than ever in her history, too. The silver-using countries of the world have more money now than they ever had before. That is one reason why they are more than ordinarily prosperous, too. Moreover, the people have more money in their pockets, which is the important thing—more important than a per capita statement. Now, why have they more money in their pockets? Is it because between the producer of an article and the consumer of an article something of the value of the article has, by the process of tariff taxation, been subtracted therefrom?

Do men grow rich by subtraction of value? Do men grow rich by diminution? Do men grow rich by scarcity? What is wealth? It is abundance. How does abundance come about? By profitable production, by the profitable application of labor to raw material, or half-finished, in making and in transforming things. Transforming is better, because in the true sense, of course, nothing is made except what God makes through the instrumentalities of water, air, and light.

The gentleman read from the New York Herald of April 15 a roseate picture of our well-being, and he made much out of it in his rhetorical way. "Farms double in value." This is one of the headlines in the Herald. Why are farms increasing in value in the United States? Is there an intelligent man or an honest man, like the one that is looking me in the face now [Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas], who will say that farms have grown in value because of the protective tariff alone or chiefly? What makes anything grow in value? The diminishing supply of it and increasing demand for it—one, or sometimes both. Here are a people growing in the last ten years by an increase of eight or ten millions in population, every man of them either wanting land or constituting a potential demand for land. And what has happened in this same decade upon the other side of the proposition? Why, for the first time in the history of the American Republic all the fertile, arable land that can be worked without irrigation within the public domain is nearly exhausted, and we are now devoting money out of the public Treasury to irrigate land in order that it may be made tillable. So that the demand for land has increased by leaps and bounds, and the supply of land has decreased seriously. Oh, gentlemen, why come into this sacred arena—and it ought to be sacred to the American people; it ought, at least, to be sacred to us who do not share the contempt for it that so many of the people do, especially that part of the people engaged in publishing yellow journals and yellow magazines—why come into an arena like this and destroy all intellectual integrity by contending that the value of cotton lands in Mississippi or corn lands in Iowa has increased because of the Dingley tariff bill? Where was there a period from the time that the first Englishman set his foot on our soil at Jamestown down to now when the value of farming land was not increasing? Not always in a direct flow like the current of a river, because that is not the way industrial affairs grow, but always growing, sometimes lapping back a little, but growing forward a step farther, a step farther, a step farther, every decade, every half decade, and every generation.

The gentleman talks about the wealth of Mississippi amongst other prosperous places. He quoted something from the Herald about that, and seemed to think it would hurt my feelings! Yes; Mississippi is prosperous. Why? Partially because the world is prosperous and Mississippi is sharing it—not only the United States, but the world—mainly because, owing to the decreased value of money on account of the increased supply of money, the price of other things as measured in money has gone up and is continuing to go up, and the process finally affected cotton amongst other things, and all the other produce that is raised upon the farm. Partially also for the same reason that the rest of America is more prosperous than other countries, because of the peculiar character of her white population—bone of bone and sinew of sinew and blood of blood with the balance of the American people—descended from sires of the bravest and boldest, though sometimes the most reckless sort of their times, who were willing to leave kith and kindred and home, old associates and accustomed scenes, and break into the wilderness amongst the savages and still more savage nature and build for themselves, standing upon their own feet, independent of the world, homes and a career. The sons who have descended from them are of the same sort of people their fathers were.

Mississippi has prospered for another reason. I do not want to indulge in partisanship now; but this other reason is that she has had stability of industrial conditions for a long time, owing to the fact that the everlasting volcano of the race problem—now in eruption and now not in eruption, but always threatening to erupt—has been quiet longer than ever before since the Missouri Compromise bill was first agitated, so that men have been able to turn their thought, which had been fevered and excited to the point of blood heat, to the tame but profitable pursuit of making money. And the old southern blood, that has never yet met its superior on the field of battle, in legislative arena, upon the farm, upon the bench, or anywhere else, when it got its opportunity to direct its attention, undisturbed by menace to social life or race supremacy, to making money, has not met its superior there either. It has profited by its opportunity. If wise, it will continue to profit by it, while surrendering no noble tradition, nor high purpose, nor vitalizing southern or race ideal.

Now, let me see what the protective tariff has had to do with the prosperity of Mississippi. Nine-tenths of the wealth of Mississippi depends upon agriculture, mainly the cotton crop, with some cotton factories. Let me dispose of the cotton factories first. If there was not a dollar of protective tariff upon coarse cotton goods made in Mississippi it would not do the Mississippi manufacturer a particle of harm, except that perhaps for the small amount of his product that he sells in the United States he might get some less money; but as a matter of fact, he ships his cotton goods to China and Manchuria and all over the world; some of them have been shipped to Great Britain itself. The protective tariff, so far as foreign competition is concerned, is absolutely useless. The cotton manufacturer will not tell you so always, though some of them have been frank enough to tell me so. Why? Although he knows he is in no danger upon that class of cotton goods—and I am referring to that class of goods—from foreign competition, he fears that if foreign goods had free access to the American market he could not sell that part of his output sold here quite as well as he now sells in the United States, i. e., at a higher profit than he sells abroad, though he sells them well abroad.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELL. Then if he should transport any of that cheaper grade of cotton goods from the southern factories which sell in many places in the Orient cheaper than in this country, the tariff would have nothing to do with it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a thing under the sun. I do not see how that question could be answered differently, because Great Britain is closer to China and Manchuria, through the Suez Canal, than we are, and freight rates are against us, and whether we take it round Cape Horn, through Suez, or across the continent and by the Pacific route, we have got to meet English, German, French, and Spanish cotton goods there, and if we are selling against them there it is because we are selling goods cheaper or else better goods at the same price. Our manufacturers in Mississippi will not admit they are fools enough to be habitually selling their goods at a loss or doing anything of that sort, and they are not.

Mr. BOUTELL. I am not certain that the gentleman understood me. Very likely he did. Then, as I understand it, there is nothing reprehensible in selling cheaper abroad than here, provided the tariff does not have anything to do with it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reprehensibility consists in selling higher here than abroad. We are not complaining when men sell cheap abroad. Where the shoe pinches is not the low price abroad, but the high price at home. I do believe the tariff does. If the manufacturer sells goods higher at home, it is, of course, not the tariff that does enable him to underbid the foreigner in Manchuria and China. But equally, of course, the tariff is the only thing that enables him to get a higher price here than abroad, because if the Englishman or German could meet him in the American market with goods, why, he would compete with them and undersell them just exactly as he does in Manchuria. He would have the same competition here, and the price that would be fixed here by that competition would be the same, as the same price is fixed in Manchuria or China by the same competition there.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to something else. The gentleman from Indiana went on to talk about the immense amount of building that was going on. True; but does the tariff help the building trades? But, first, the gentleman's interruption made me forget to go on with the Mississippi situation. There is no protective tariff on cotton. Of course everybody knows that. The little cotton that enters is Egyptian cotton of the long staple variety. If there were a protective tariff on the ordinary cotton of 5 cents per pound or $5 per pound, it could not affect the price five-thousandths part of 1 cent, because the whole world, free to compete now, can not and does not send us one bale. It could affect the price of the long staple cotton. We have not a cent of protection at all. But how, if we had, would that affect the cotton planter, the lawyer, the dentist, the merchant, the menial servant, the carpenter, the blacksmith, or everybody else, who down in my part of Dixie live directly or indirectly out of the cotton crop? Our prosperity depends, so far as production is concerned, absolutely on cotton. If it declines in price, of course it adversely affects the prosperity of the man who raises the cotton and adversely, of course, therefore, the prosperity of the man whose prosperity is dependent upon the prosperity of the cotton raiser.

In short, the tariff does not help us get a higher price for what we sell. How does it affect what we buy? What do we buy? Clothing? We must pay a higher price for that on account of the tariff. Shoes? Our Mississippian must pay a higher price for those on account of the tariff. Hats, cravats, coffins, cradles? He must pay a higher price for them on account of the tariff. What else? Plows, mowing machines? He must pay a higher price for them on account of the tariff. Barbed wire, steel nails? He must pay a higher price for them on account of the tariff. Cotton gins? He must pay a higher price for them on account of the tariff. Cotton-mill machinery? He must pay a higher price for that on account of the tariff. There is not a point of possible contact with the protective tariff where it does not hurt the Mississippian, and yet, as the gentleman says, Mississippi and the South are prosperous to-day, and what he quoted from the Herald is not all—not the half. He did not state it strongly enough.

We have increased the value of our land, the amount of our crops, the mileage of our railroads, the number of our looms, the number of our spindles, and every other possible thing that leads to wealth, in a larger percentage in the last ten years than any other part of the United States or any other part of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have done it because of the tariff, have we? We have done it in spite of the tariff and in the teeth of the tariff. [Applause.] Why, the gentleman dwelt upon the great prosperity of Iowa, and attributed it to the tariff. And yet the Iowa farmers are going, thousands strong, across the Canadian border. Why? It is a place where they can make more money, or think they can. That is the reason people move—to better their condition. And then I suppose, in order to be logical, he will have to prove that the Dingley tariff is operative in Canada. If he does not, then his entire argument falls to the ground. Why should the Iowan move out of Dingley tariff-prospered Iowa, leaving his household goods and his country's flag and all its blessed and tender associations to go to Canada—a land cursed by the lack of—the dearth of—a Dingley tariff?

What else does the Mississippi farmer need money for? What else does the Iowa farmer need money for? To build homes; and I am going to insert in the RECORD, and I ask permission now to do it, part of a speech made by Mr. Fred Cyrus Leubuscher, of New York City, to the United States Building and Loan Association League on July 27, 1905, showing how much the tariff increases the price of homes to the American people, and especially cheap homes for the American yeomanry—Americans of the middle class.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask first to insert this matter to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Keep in mind as you read it this axiom: "The higher the price of building materials, the less building is done; the less building done the less employment for those in the building trades—carpenters, painters, glaziers, brick masons, stone cutters, plumbers, electricians, excavators, draymen and wagoners, contractors, architects, etc.; the less employment for those in the building trades the lower their wages.

The parts of the speech to which I call attention are as follows:

THE TARIFF TAX ON HOMES.

[By Fred. Cyrus Leubuscher, New York City.]

"You are quite presumptuous," wrote a famous political economist to whom I had applied for data, "to suppose that in the compass of a short paper, you can fully cover such a subject as the tariff tax on homes." He was correct in his criticism—from his standpoint—for he assumed that I meant to discuss not only the house but all of its contents—food, clothing, furniture, and bric-a-brac, as well as lumber, brick, stone, and iron. It would not only be presumptuous, but it would be impertinent as well for me, as a building association man in a convention of the United States League of Building Associations, to attempt to treat, save incidentally, of anything except the building itself and the materials which enter into the making of it.

* * * * * * *

The expense of housing is, next to that of food, the principal item entering into the cost of living.

The July, 1904, report of the Bureau of Labor, based upon new estimates for 2,567 families, gives the per cent of expenditures for the principal items entering into the cost of living, as follows:

Food	42.54
Rent	12.95
Principal and interest on mortgages on homes	1.58
Fuel	4.19
Lighting	1.06
Clothing	14.04
Taxes	.75
Insurance	2.73
Labor and other organization fees	1.17
Religious purposes	.99
Charity	.31
Furniture and utensils	3.42
Books and newspapers	1.09
Amusement and vacation	1.60
Intoxicating liquors	1.62
Tobacco	1.42
Sickness and death	2.67
Other purposes	5.87
Total	100.00

If we lump the per cents of rent, interest on mortgages, and taxes, which legitimately belong together, we have a total of 15.28, making it the second largest item in the cost of living.

Rent and building materials should be considered together, because the tariff tax on rent is due to the tariff tax on building materials, which greatly increases the cost of building and repairing houses. Those who buy materials and build their own homes pay their tariff tribute on building materials direct to the scores of protected trusts that "guard our homes as a pack of wolves guard a flock of sheep." Those who rent homes pay their tariff tribute through the landlords, who add enough to the rent bills to cover the tariff cost of constructing the rented homes.

The population of this country probably increased in the year which ended July 1 by over 2,000,000 souls, half of them immigrants, the latter being adults in greater proportion than the native-born population. In order merely to supply shelter for this addition to the population, assigning five persons to a group or family, 400,000 dwellings would be required. At an average of only $1,000 for the cost of a dwelling place of five persons, the housing of the increased population would require 400,000 dwelling places at $1,000 each, or an expenditure of $400,000,000. In order to meet this demand on the men that must be occupied in cutting timber, on the men in the sawmills, in the carpenter shops, in the brickyards, in the stone quarries, in the nail factories, etc., and on the men engaged in assembling and putting up the dwellings, 800,000 men must be occupied for one year merely to house the increase of population of a single year. Half this number, at least, would be employed in the building trades—carpenters, masons, painters, plumbers, and the like. Notwithstanding these stupendous figures the manufacture of homes finds no place in the United States census, and there are no data by which the annual cost can be accurately computed. We must therefore get at our figures in another way.

Excluding the lumbermen, the men in the sawmills, in the brickyards, and in the stone quarries, and including only carpenters, masons, painters, plasterers, and plumbers occupied in the building trades, the number in 1900 exceeded 1,200,000, the largest single body occupied in one art outside of agriculture.

It is estimated that the average earnings of these classes is $2 a day for three hundred days in the year, or $600 a year. Wages are higher in the cities and lower in the country; but, taking a general average of $2 a day for 1,200,000 men, their earnings are over $700,000,000 annually.

As the cost of labor in putting up buildings may be computed in a rough and ready way at 30 per cent of the final cost, the annual value of manufactured buildings in the United States must exceed two thousand million dollars.

The manufacture of dwellings, in ratio to the population, is diminishing. The population of cities is becoming more and more congested. There is greater and greater difficulty in housing the increasing number. The cost of dwellings and the consequent increase of rent presses harder and harder every year upon persons of moderate and small incomes. There are several reasons for this; and one reason will be found in the taxation of building materials imposed under the present tariff. Nearly every article that enters into the construction of the dwelling house is heavily taxed at the expense of those who pay rent or who build their own dwellings for the sole benefit and profit of a very small number belonging to the privileged class who own the timber lands, stone quarries, marble quarries, and deposits of clay, and of the steel trust, window-glass trust, plate-glass trust, and other members of the privileged class who have perverted the power of public taxation to purposes of private gain. In the matter of timber, we are deprived of the abundance of Canada while we are denuding our own hills, thus not only taxing the dwellings, but destroying the protection of the water supplies of the country. Brick and stone, which we might derive in abundance from the neighboring Dominion, are heavily taxed. Marble is heavily taxed; one of the recipients of the bounty being a Senator of the United States. The makers of every kind of household hardware are taxed on their steel, on their tin plates, on their copper, on their zinc, on their lead. The makers of paint are taxed on the materials which form components parts, and so on throughout the list.

It would be almost beyond possibility to trace out the evil of these influences or to compute the increase of cost on each dwelling place. It can not be less than 20 per cent on the cost of every dwelling house, and is more likely to be in excess of 25 per cent than any other figure. In this way the poor are crowded or unhoused. Persons of small incomes are taxed more heavily than any other class in proportion to their income. The whole community is burdened by taxes from which the Government receives little or no revenue, but of which nearly all the proceeds are conveyed into the pockets of the privileged class at whose instance the power of public taxation is perverted to purposes of private gain.

From the most high protectionist standpoint, the tariff tax is unnecessary on the mass of building materials. In the United States duties are levied for two ostensible purposes: First, to raise revenue; second, to protect our manufacturers and wage workers against the lower prices of foreign countries, which would otherwise undersell them, and thus tend to drive them out of business. Are these two purposes subserved by levying the present tariff on building materials? Let us see. The 1900 census values the principal products that enter into the building of houses as follows:

Carpentering	316,101,758
Gas and lamp fixtures	12,577,806
Gas machines and meters	4,392,730
Glass	56,539,712
Iron and steel nails and spikes	14,777,299
Iron and steel pipe	21,292,043
Ironwork, architectural, etc	53,508,179
Lead, bar, pipe, and sheet	7,477,824
Lime and cement	28,689,135
Lumber, planing-mill products	168,343,003
Mantels, slate and marble	1,153,540
Marble and stone work	85,101,591
Masonry, brick and stone	203,593,634
Oil, linseed	27,184,331
Painting and paper hanging	88,396,852
Paints	50,874,995
Paper hangings	10,663,209
Plumbers' supplies	14,771,185
Plumbing, gas, etc., fittings	131,852,567
Pumps, not steam	1,341,713
Roofing and roofing materials	29,916,592
Steam fittings and heating apparatus	22,084,860
Tin and terne plate	31,892,011
Tinsmithing, sheet-iron working, etc	100,310,720
Varnish	18,687,240
Wood, turned and carved	14,338,503

These figures were obtained from factories, and of course are wholesale prices. I think it is fair to state that at least one-third more is paid by the final consumer after the products have passed through the hands of various middlemen. This brings the figures up to about $2,100,000,000. Mr. Byron W. Holt, the well-known economist, has made careful estimates which show that to these figures should be added at least $200,000,000 for lumber other than planing-mill products, and $200,000,000 more as the cost of foundry, machine-shop, and blacksmithing products and of structural iron and steel. He also computed the cost of all other materials at $117,000,000. This makes a grand total of about $2,600,000,000 as the annual expense bill of the people of the United States for erecting and repairing buildings. Probably from 20 to 30 per cent of this sum is expended on business and public buildings, churches, etc. Making a liberal deduction for these, we find that Uncle Sam's nephews and nieces expend every year almost $2,000,000,000, or the wealth of two Rockefellers, with which to protect themselves from wind and weather.

The cost of building materials is now fully 50 per cent higher than it was eight years ago when the Dingley tariff bill became a law. This is only in slight measure due to higher wages; and it it estimated that the tariff is responsible for most of this increase. According to Moody's Manual most of the trusts have been formed since 1898, and it is only since that date that the lumber and other trusts have fully realized how the tariff enables them to raise prices. [Or rather have been enabled to consummate what they realized—J. S. W.] There can be no doubt that if the tariff on building material were abolished, the prices of lumber, paint, varnish, glass, tin plate, pipe, cement, nails, screws, lead, etc., would be lower than in 1897. If the tariff increases the cost of houses only one-fourth, it adds more than 10 per cent to rent, for the value of houses is on an average probably twice that of the lots on which they stand. Rents in cheap flat houses average annually about 10 per cent of the value of the house and lot. If a man pays $9 a month rent for an apartment, his part of the house is probably worth $800, and of the lot on which it stands, $300; total, $1,100. Without a tariff, he would pay rent on property worth only $900 ($600 for his part of the house and $300 for his part of the lot) instead of $1,100, and his rent would not average more than $8 a month. The low cost of building materials is largely responsible for the very low rents in England.

A large proportion of the rent for homes goes to cover the cost of repairs. These consist largely of lumber, paint, glass, cement, nails, screws, and roofing materials, the cost of nearly all of which is increased 40 or 50 per cent, or more, by the tariff. If the materials for repairs on the average house cost $15 a year the tariff is responsible for about $4 or $5 of this amount. I have, therefore, estimated the tariff cost of those who own and of those who rent homes together. In either case it is the occupants of homes who pay the so-called protective tariff tax of constructing and repairing the homes of this country—unprotected from the protected tariff trusts.

It requires a great deal of calculation to arrive at the average rate of duty under the tariff act of 1897. On some products the duty is imposed according to weight or quantity, on others according to the value, and on still others according to both quantity or weight and value. On Portland cement, for instance, the rate is 8 cents per 100 pounds, and on other cement 20 per cent ad valorem. I have, however, taken the report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and carefully calculated the ratio between the imports for the year ending June 30, 1904, and the duties collected thereon; and I find that the average percentage of duty on the principal materials entering into buildings is as follows:

	Per cent.
Brick and tile	32
Cement	25
Glass	68
Iron and steel nails	28
Iron and steel pipe	36
Lead	82
Lime	34
Lumber (planing-mill product)	15
Marble	55
Paints (white lead)	55
Paper hangings	25
Stone	50

Now, what justification is there for thus handicapping the poor man in his struggle for a home? Is it revenue? In 1903 less than $12,000,000 was collected in the custom-houses from duties on building materials; and in making up the list, in order to be perfectly fair, I included materials that are not used in the average building, such as asphaltum, coal tar, oxide of cobalt, iron beams and girders, marble, and onyx. So that less than 2 per cent of the Federal revenue is derived from this source—surely not enough to warrant the Government in discouraging the building of homes.

Take the item of cement. I venture to prophesy that the exterior of the humble home of the future will consist of stucco of cement—that is, if the price is cheapened. Buildings constructed of this material not only present a pleasing appearance, but are practically indestructible. During the past ten years the manufacture of cement has increased at the rate of about 25 per cent per annum. The tariff on the various kinds of cement averages 25 per cent ad valorem, and it is evident that were it not for this extra charge of one-fourth added to the price the sales would be largely increased. According to the census bulletin, the United States in 1901 manufactured 20,068,000 barrels of cement, valued at $15,786,000, or at the rate of 75 cents a barrel. During the same year we imported only 939,330 barrels, valued at $704,000. The duty paid on this was only about $175,000. Will 80,000,000 Americans continue to limit their supply of this most necessary building material for the sake of a beggarly $175,000 of revenue? The hardheadedness of the average Yankee will soon impel him to answer an emphatic "No!" to that question.

Even the most hidebound protectionist must now admit that unless the apologists for a tariff tax on building materials can show that it tends not only to keep men employed who without it would be obliged to seek another livelihood, but also to increase their wages, it should be repealed by the next Congress. Remember that we are not now considering manufactured articles, such as cotton goods, shoes, etc., but what are practically raw materials, for all things used for the building of a house are in relation to it raw materials. If the tariff on these were necessary in order to keep men employed at living wages, the majority of the American people would bear it patiently, for they seem wedded to the protectionist idea. The prices they pay, however, should be greater than the European prices for similar goods only in proportion as American wages are greater than the European. As a matter of fact, the prices charged their fellow-countrymen by the trusts which control the principal building materials are many times greater than the difference in wages.

Besides that, if the tariff is necessary in order to maintain what the trusts call the American standard of wages in competition with the pauper wages of Europe, why is it that these same trusts are able to export to those poverty-stricken countries, and at a profit, too? Window glass is heavily taxed, and the census bulletin of July 3, 1902, states (at p. 42) that exports of this most necessary building material are "steadily increasing."

I have thus far shown that the only two reasons that justify a tariff, viz, revenue and protection, do not apply to building materials. The hypocritical pretenses of the building-material trusts having been proven, I will now show that they have taken advantage of the situation by not only getting all they can out of their fellow-countrymen, but are actually enabled to undersell foreigners on their own territory. They export large quantities of their products, and sell them abroad at competitive free-trade prices. This is the fact with the tin-plate trust and the lead trust, but is more strikingly illustrated with the steel trust than with the others. Most kinds of iron and steel sell here for from 50 to 100 per cent above foreign prices.

Careful estimates of the tariff profits of the United States Steel Corporation indicate that they amount to $162,000,000 for the years 1902 and 1903, the total net profits being $242,000,000. These estimates were based mainly on the difference between the export and home prices of steel products and goods, the difference being multiplied by the quantity of each kind of product sold, as given in the annual report of this company for the year ending December 31, 1903. This $162,000,000 is clear tariff profit. That is, had there been no duties on these steel products, and had they been sold here at the same prices for which they were sold abroad, they would have cost our consumers $162,000,000 less than they did. As nearly all of these are unfinished products, it is evident that American manufacturers, to whom steel is a raw material, have to pay nearly $80,000,000 a year more for these materials to the United States Steel Company than is paid by their foreign competitors, even though they buy steel of our steel trust. The United States Steel Company manufactures only two-thirds of our steel; therefore, adding the tariff tax charged by the manufacturers of the other third, we find that Americans are annually charged for American steel $120,000,000 more than are Englishmen, Germans, Frenchmen, and Russians. This in itself is a great handicap upon our manufacturers, especially when attempting to sell goods in foreign markets. It is this discrimination in favor of foreign manufacturers, making it much cheaper to produce outside of than inside of our tariff wall, that is mainly responsible for the exodus of American capital into foreign countries. Scores of "branch" mills and factories, operated by Americans, have, during the past few years, been located abroad in order to escape from the "protection" that means dearer raw materials and higher cost of production. Had there been no unnecessary duties on raw materials the great amount of business now done in these American-owned foreign mills would be done in this country, to the great advantage of our own workingmen. Of course these manufacturers tack the extra charges on to the final consumers—the builders of homes.

On July 30, 1904, the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin contained the following:

"One of the most interesting features of the steel situation is an important sale of several thousand tons of steel plates for export, the price of £5 delivered at Newcastle-upon-Tyne netting the mills about 90 cents per net ton, f. o. b. Pittsburg. It should be remembered that sales are made in the English market by the gross ton. Allowing $3.50 freight rates and a slight allowance for insurance, this price would net the mills $20 gross, or $1.80 per ton net, or 90 cents per 100, against $1.60 per 100 for domestic business."

* * * * * * *

It is only fair to state that the apologists for this tariff claim that the amounts thus exported are very small and constitute only what they term "surplus products." Secretary of the Treasury Shaw claims that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, the total exports that were sold abroad at lower prices than in the United States amounted to only $4,000,000. How he obtained these figures he does not state, but they are easily disproved. Take iron and steel, for example. Our exports of iron and steel goods for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, were valued at $111,948,586. From these exports a half dozen items, each larger than $4,000,000, and some of them materials that enter into the building of homes, can be picked out, such as wire, $5,821,921; builders' hardware, $11,726,191; pipes and fittings, $6,310,551. If iron and steel alone furnish over a hundred millions, how stupendous must be the totals of all goods exported by the trusts for which they charge foreigners less than they do their fellow-citizens. "But," exclaim the apologists, "there is no proof that any appreciable part of these exports are sold for less than American prices." It is indeed difficult to get at the facts, because it is to the interest of the trust magnates to conceal them. In an unguarded moment, however, President Schwab, of the steel trust, testified before the Industrial Commission on May 11, 1901, as follows:

"Q. Is it a fact generally true of all exporters in this country that they do sell at lower prices in foreign markets than they do in the home markets?—A. That is true; perfectly true."

* * * * * * *

Only one refuge is left for our apologists, and they have all fled to it, and that is the claim that these foreign sales are made either at cost or at an actual loss. And why do these philanthropists, the trusts, sell goods at a loss? Simply in order to keep the workingmen busy, so that they will not lose their wages. The argument presupposes that the 80,000,000 inhabitants of this country are too poor to keep the mills and factories at work all the time, and that the trusts love the dear people so much that they take money out of their own pockets in order to give them steady work. The exports of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1904, are valued by the Government at $452,000,000. As all of these, according to Mr. Schwab, were sold at a lower price than the goods sold in the home market, the trusts would have the American people believe that they deliberately lost money on almost a half billion of exports solely for sweet charity's sake. A trust has been defined as an entity with neither a body to be kicked nor a soul to be damned. If, however, we are to believe these apologists, they are all soul and the sublimest personification of altruism this world has ever seen.

Protectionists should therefore join forces with free traders in demanding the repeal of the tariff tax on building materials as not only utterly unnecessary from the protectionist standpoint, but as a handicap on Americans in their struggle for supremacy in the race of civilization. Remove this tax and the demand for masons, carpenters, and housebuilders generally will be so great that wages will rise and thus enable the mechanics in their turn to become home owners. Remove this tax and in a few years the number of homes will be doubled. Remove this tax and the pressure of population in the tenement-house districts will be lessened, while little cottages will multiply in the suburbs. Remove this tax and tens of thousands of little pallid children, instead of dying amid the stenches of the tenements, will grow to sturdy manhood and sweet womanhood in God's country.

"The American home, the safeguard of American liberty," the motto of the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations, demands that we, above all, should join in the movement to strike the shackles from the home-building industries. Indeed, we should be the leaders, for it was to increase the number of American homes that building associations came into existence. Our cooperative thrift movement seeks to depopulate the tenements, those pestilential breeding spots that may some day hatch out the demons that will subvert our liberties.

The late Jay Gould testified before an investigating committee that he was a Republican in Republican counties, a Democrat in Democratic counties, but always an Erie man. I think that it will be profitable to take a leaf from the book of experience of the monopolists, for they are among the ablest men in the country. Why should we allow our political prejudices to stand in the way of accomplishing an object that is near to the hearts of all of us? Some of us are Republicans, some of us are Democrats, some are protectionists, some are free traders, but all of us are building-association men [and home builders or would-be home builders.—J. S. W.]. Let us forget that we are partisans of this party or that, but let us remember that we are partisans of a deep-seated purpose, and that that purpose is the upbuilding of the American home.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Mississippi asks why the Iowa farmer sells his lands and goes to Canada to buy land. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the Iowa farmer sells his land in Iowa because he has been feeding more laboring people within the last ten years than he has ever fed in any like period before, and that explains the fact that the price of farms has gone up enormously. It also explains why those farmers are selling their land for from $125 to $175 per acre and going to Canada and buying land for from ten to fifteen and twenty dollars an acre.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly that is true, as it is also true that Canadian and Argentinian and British farmers have also been feeding more laboring men in the last ten years than in any other like period; but that is not the ultimate ratio; that is not the ultimate reason back of it all why Iowa farmers are selling these high and expensive lands in Iowa and going to Canada to buy cheap land. It is not merely because they want to exchange a certain number of dollars' worth of high-priced land for a certain number of dollars' worth of cheap land. It is because with the cheap land which they can buy with the money for which they sold the high-priced land they can make more money in Canada than they can make back in Iowa. In other words, the Iowa farmer is going to Canada for the very same reason that before the Revolution and since the Revolution and up to now the European farmer has been coming to America, because it is a country of cheaper lands, of freer opportunities, of better opportunities, where more money can be made. In other words, to bring it down to the very last point, the Iowa farmer is going to Canada to better his condition, and he must think it is an arena where conditions are superior to those in Iowa which he is leaving.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Omitting the partisanship that might be dragged into the question and getting down to what the gentleman from Mississippi so often calls the "real logic of the situation and the good sense of it," the Iowa farmer is selling his land in Iowa and going to Canada because he wants to get more land for the large family of boys that he is raising.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the real reason.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To better his condition for himself and his family now and for the future, and the fact that Canada has no Dingley tariff does not stand in his way.

Now, this reminds me that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] drew a certain eloquent picture. I wish I had his eloquence of diction and gesticulation, with just a little bit more logic combined with it. I think then I could make a speech.

This picture he drew of "the immigrant," when he referred in criticism to my friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], who is now under the surgeon's knife or he would have been here. The picture which he drew of the immigrant was eloquent all over. He says, "They come, they come, they come." And then he told how they came. "Came to the best country in the world," "not the worst country in the world." "They come." Yes, they come, and they came in colonial days; they came before the Revolution; they came during the Revolution; they came after the Revolution; they came between that and the Mexican war; they came during the Mexican war; they came between that and the war between the States; they came during the war between the States, and they have come ever since. They have come in colonial days when we had no tariff of any sort, and were virtually restricted to trade with Great Britain; they came in the early days of the Republic, when we had a very low revenue tariff; they came later on under a higher, but not what we would now call a protective tariff, in 1816, and they continued to come after the tariff was reduced about 1826 or 1828. They continued to come when it was brought down to a revenue basis in 1842, and they continued to come when it was reduced still further in 1857; they have continued to come every year. There has been now and then a check during a panic period. There was a check about 1857, there was a check in 1873, there was a check in 1877, there was a check in 1892 and 1893 and 1894, and also about 1897 and 1898. I mean that the increase was less than the normal increase, but they continued to come.

Now, why? For the very same reason that the Iowa farmer is going to Canada—he can improve his condition. What makes him think he can improve his condition? In the first place he can get higher wages, and he could get higher wages here than in Europe in colonial times. There never was a time from the time the pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock up to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States when wages for the blacksmith, for the carpenter, for the skilled artisan, and the unskilled laborer in the field were not about double what they were in Great Britain. No tariff, high tariff, low tariff, all sorts of tariff—it made no difference what the tariff on our statute books nor what foreign tariffs were, they came. The wages were double what they were in the countries with no tariff; double what they were in the countries with a high or low tariff; and why? Because in thickly settled countries land is hard to buy, high to buy, and high to rent. What is the touchstone of wages? It is the amount of comparatively free land. That question is worthy of study. You can not make any man an industrial slave who is in the neighborhood of cheap land—cheap to buy or cheap to rent. You can not make an industrial slave of a man who can come to me and go into partnership with me in my land, in my capital, and he get half of what we make, and I feed him in the meantime.

There never was a time in those days when you could not go into that share and share proposition all the way from Virginia to Maine, and all over the country. It is ceasing in a part of the country now; we are getting to the limits of cheap land. We have got to where we have to irrigate land, and after we irrigate it we have to sell it or rent it to settlers at a higher price on account of the cost of irrigation. The check which agriculture furnishes to industrial enslavement, the first step toward which is low standard of wage, will cease in America after a while. I hope that it will not be earlier than a hundred years from now, but it will come here as it has come everywhere else, unless the present industrial system shall be totally revolutionized. Labor, gold, wheat, everything in this world that has a money value, unlike water, seeks the place of the highest level. As long as there is a place of highest level it seeks it, and just as water, in pursuing the converse course, has a tendency, if it is checked anywhere, to come to an absolute level, so these commodities seek the point of highest ascendency, and if blocked and checked by this tendency itself, come to a dead level or an approximate level. So that the people going to a place where the wages are highest themselves automatically check the constant rising of wages in the country toward which they are going, while their leaving tends to raise wages in the countries whence they come.

And this is a part of the miserable inconsistency of the Republican party. They tell us in one breath that we are bound to have a tariff in America in order to make American wages higher than they are abroad, and in the very next breath they tell us that the reason for the tariff being in existence is that wages in America are already higher than they are abroad.

In one breath they tell us to shut out the products of pauper labor so that it may not decrease the wage of the American wage-earner, and yet being acquainted, if they have any sense, with this economic law which I have mentioned, knowing that the result of its operation will be to invite laborers from all the world to come to America where the highest wage price is, or to Canada, or New Zealand, or to Cape Colony or other countries with high-wage points, knowing that the effect will be to make them come here, they do not put any tariff on the labor itself. In other words, they are encouraging the free, automatic operation of the law which furnishes in itself finally the check, to a standstill, of the condition which created the flow of labor, of the condition of scarcity of labor which gave and gives us higher wages. As the labor continues to come, density of population here and in Europe will become equalized.

When density of population here is as great as it is in Great Britain the supply of labor will be immensely increased, and the demand for labor will not be in the same proportion increased. As they leave Europe they deplete the supply of labor there, while the demand for labor is not proportionately increased, and as a consequence their price of labor or wage rate goes up little by little and ours will come down little by little, and there is no sort of legislation under the sun except shutting out the laborer himself that can prevent or delay that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does not the gentleman admit that in countries that have the highest protective tariff to-day there is the greatest amount of industrial growth and development and wealth?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not.

Mr. GRAHAM. In countries like Germany and America and other countries with a high protective tariff there is the largest amount of prosperity to-day, more so than in countries like Great Britain that have no tariff walls.

Now, let the gentleman take countries like we are; let him go, for comparison, to New Zealand, let him go to Cape Colony—a free-trade colony—let him go to Canada, with what we call "a very low revenue tariff," and he will find comparatively the same labor conditions. There are not quite as high wages in Canada as there are here. There are higher wages in Cape Colony than here for similar work. The reasons why the wages are not quite as high in Canada are that it is a cold, bleak, sterile country, and as a consequence it has not as great a proportion of pleasant, rich lands to live upon as we have had in the past, and then, too, it has not had altogether the same character of population. The French population and the early English population of Canada were assisted immigrants. They were not the sort of men who, whatever their vices may have been, whatever their faults may have been, were the boldest of their generation; and the man who is the boldest of his generation is apt to be the most enterprising, apt to be the most inventive, and he is apt, of course, just as horses and sheep are, to leave descendants behind him of his sort, and until new conditions of acquired density of population and new conditions of a fixed, industrial slavocracy, if I may call it so, shall sap his independence and manhood and courage, he will always be man for man the superior—not because he is of superior race, but because he is descended from the culled individuals of all these other races.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] then dwelt upon our foreign commerce, and I call attention to what he said now as a cold matter of reason and not as a matter of oratory. He dwelt upon our foreign commerce, as I say, and then, of course, dwelt in the same breath upon the Dingley bill. Does a protective tariff increase exports? There is an argument that it decreases them, but I have never heard any human being argue that from the nature of the thing itself it could increase them. A great many people argue that in proportion as you cut off imports you cut off the purchasing power of the foreigner to purchase your exports, and decrease them. No human being has ever been brazen enough yet to argue that a protective tariff per se, or by natural consequence in any way, encouraged exports, increased the volume of exports, or increased the price of exports.

Mr. GRAHAM. But the increase of prosperity produces the wealth with which to purchase them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Increased prosperity abroad will increase our exportation, because it adds to the purchasing power of the foreigner who wants our commodities, but our protective tariff can not increase it. Can the protective tariff increase our imports? All foreign commerce consists of imports and exports. All foreign trade consists of these two things—exports and imports.

Now, the very object of the protective tariff is to keep out the imports. Just in proportion as it succeeds in its aim, just in that proportion does it restrict imports. The gentleman says that Democrats said if we passed certain high protective laws, it would be like putting a stone wall around all the United States to keep out importations. Well, gentlemen, in just so far as the protective tariff is not a stone wall keeping out importations in that far exactly does it lack of being fully "protective," as you call it. The only absolute protective tariff is one that prohibits the entry of all foreign products of the character that are raised in your own country. Now, the actual as well as the intended effect of the protective tariff therefore is to prohibit or restrict or limit. That is its object. If it does not do that, it has failed of its object; in just that far has it fallen short of the mission of its maker Now, it can not increase exports. If it can not increase exports and if it is intended to decrease imports, how can it increase "our foreign trade?"

Mr. BATES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi how he explains the fact that last year America led the whole world in exports, our exports being over $15,000,000 more than England, which is not a protective-tariff nation. If a protective tariff has nothing to do with it, how does the gentleman explain the remarkable phenomenon that last year we became the leading export nation on the globe?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, we were the leading earthquake nation on the globe, too.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman say that was in spite of rather than on account of the protective tariff?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; of course, that is what I was going to say.

Mr. BATES. I rather thought the gentleman would say that. I would like to ask him one other question——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me answer this one first, and then you can ask the other. Now, the gentleman asks how it is if a protective tariff does not cause increased exports we have increased our exports so that we are the largest export country in the word. That is the question?

Mr. BATES. That is the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is so easily answered I am satisfied if my friend had thought a minute he would not have asked the question. Does the gentleman remember the number of emigrants who have arrived in the last ten years; what did they average?

Mr. BATES. Over a million last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, for the last ten years I will assume we have received seven or eight millions. Now, there are seven or eight million more workers making things to sell, and a good part of those things have to go abroad, and then again a great many of those workers went on the farms, or else enabled Americans to stay on the farms, raising cotton and wheat and hogs for export. The birth rate of the United States I do not remember, but our people who were just below the working age and who in that ten years have grown up to the working age probably amount to three or four times the number of immigrants who came in, or several times the number of immigrants who came in, and those people, too—our own people—have been at work. Now, let us take the character of the exports and see if the gentleman is right. The gentleman will not contend for one moment, I presume, that the tariff produces the cotton crop or the tariff had anything to do with the price of the cotton crop. The cotton crop has grown in value and the cotton crop has grown in price until last year we shipped abroad three hundred and fifty odd million dollars, I believe it was, although I have not a good memory about figures. This was in cotton alone, without counting other unprotected agricultural products, so that the entire so-called "balance of trade" in favor of the United States was made up, with the exception of about $21,000,000, out of cotton alone. During that year we shipped abroad, I do not remember how many hundred millions of dollars of wheat, I do not remember how much corn and corn products, I do not remember how much cotton-seed oil, but if the gentleman will take the things we shipped abroad he will find nine-tenths of them to be things not only unprotected, to use that word which is inaccurate, not only "untariffed," but if "tariffed," incapable of protection, because we make every year a surplus of them.

Now, then would it not be the most remarkable thing in the world that we should not have increased our exports, and would it not have been the most remarkable thing in the world that we should not have increased our imports, even in spite of the natural tendency of the tariff to restrict imports? We have done both by the industry of the people, by the increase in the birth rate, by the increase in the immigration rate; and the immigration, by the way, which comes to this country—a very large percentage, about two-thirds I believe—are men within the laboring age, men within the military age, which would mean they were within the laboring age at the same time. These men have gone into the mines, into the factories, on the farms, into the shops everywhere in the country. They and our own people increasing rapidly have been doing things—making things—making and growing them in larger quantities than they could eat them up and wear them out, and hence selling them abroad in spite of the tariff, which forbids us from getting the good things that others raise and make in return for our own good things as cheaply and abundantly as we could if foreign trade were less restricted.

In spite of the tariff which cuts us off from the abundance of things we want to buy. Let us come back, if the gentleman please, to the definition of what is wealth. What is wealth? Wealth is abundance produced by labor profitably employed. Improve on that definition if you can. Wealth is never scarcity. Scarcity is the opposite of wealth. A high price growing out of scarcity may benefit a particular seller, but it always hurts a community. Any sort of restriction is a step toward scarcity, and a step toward scarcity is a step toward poverty. A step toward abundance in all of the things that men need to eat and drink and wear and see and hear in this world constitutes wealth.

Mr. BATES. The gentleman who is now addressing the committee is a cotton planter, I believe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BATES. And he has explained, as we all know, that there is no tariff on cotton. I take it, Mr. Chairman, that he rejoices that he is a Member of the House of Representatives, not of Mississippi, or the Yazoo district, but of the United States, and that he has an interest in the prosperity, not only of his State, but of the United States, of which that is only a small part.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope so.

Mr. BATES. I hope so, and I am sure that is true. The gentleman is in favor of a change in the tariff laws which would increase imports. Is it not beyond denial that to increase the imports into this country would close up mills and factories all over this land? Would not that decrease the purchasing power of the American people, so that the home market, which is now our best market, would be seriously impaired, and that we would be buying our goods in Leeds, in Manchester, and in Bristol, and the other cities of England and the continent, and they would be running their mills double time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, does not the gentleman seriously think that if I undertook to answer that question fully I would not have to write a work on political economy?

Mr. BATES. I wished to direct the gentleman's attention——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the whole tariff question. I can not answer a question of that sort.

Mr. BATES. I wished to direct the gentleman's attention especially to whether he desires to have freer imports into this country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course I do, if that is what you are up to. The decrease of a tariff duty, which is in its nature protective, to what ought to be its status—a revenue status—could not possibly cause the importation of any article into the United States except an article which it pays some American citizen to buy because it saves him money to buy it. There could not possibly be because of such a decrease of tariff rates an importation which would not be of benefit to the men who are buying the things imported, or else the man buying the thing imported would be a fool. I take it for granted he would not buy unless he wanted it; he would not buy it unless he needed it, and that he would buy it only because it paid him to buy it, in actual dollars and cents.

Now, that it might cut off some of the swollen profits of a few governmental favorites who have been hothoused into unnatural prosperity, at the expense of all others, by unnatural and abnormal profits in the home market—in a monopolistic or approximately monopolized market—I do not doubt; but where it hurts one man's pocketbook in that way—in a way of which he would have no just right to complain, because no man has a vested right in any existing wrong, however profitable it may be to him—it would aid 10,000 men's pocketbooks who had to have the shoes and the clothes and the agricultural implements and the barbed wire and the nails and the cotton gins and the cotton machinery. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. Just one more interruption. I will not interrupt the gentleman further. They say sometimes that it is the weakest link in the chain that tests its strength. Instead of what the gentleman calls the "governmental favorites" being injured by freer imports, would not they be the last to be affected rather than the first? Would not the struggling industry of to-day, the one that is becoming a healthy competitor of what he calls the "favorites" and combined interests, be the first to be winked out and leave those to which he refers in complete charge of the field?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, "the struggling industry," as he calls it, is not protected or it would not be "struggling." That is the answer to that. It is the fellow that is not struggling, that is fully protected, that a rational reduction would damage, if it damaged anybody.

Now, I want to go back. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] talked about our foreign trade. I have shown that whatever increase we could make in our foreign trade was in no wise and could in no wise be an effect of, but was in spite of the tariff, but what I now want to call your attention to is this—and I can not too frequently repeat it, and I do not think that the friends of tariff reform and reduction can too frequently repeat it—even if it were granted that protective tariff increased our foreign trade (and it does not and can not, as its natural effect is to restrict international commerce, and as that is its object) what is the cause of our great trade prosperity, our great volume of trade? And what proportion of it is foreign and what proportion of it is domestic?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask this question: What is the percentage which our foreign commerce bears to our entire domestic commerce——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A very small per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A very small per cent. It is so very small that, although I do not remember the figures, I believe it is less than 1 per cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. About three, I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My recollection is that it is less than 1 per cent, but I will adopt 3 per cent. Three per cent, then, I will say, of our entire volume of trade.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not disputing the gentleman, but I think our foreign trade is about 8 per cent. If the gentleman will allow me one word——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will let me finish this argument I will yield, but I want to get at this now. It depends upon what you call domestic commerce. You may adopt 8 per cent, if you please, or 3 per cent, but in the true definition of what constitutes the volume of our domestic trade, it has not been 1 per cent, and I will show you why. The number of things that are raised upon the farm and consumed upon the farm, eggs and chickens and wheat and corn and hogs, and all the balance of it—the number or value of things that are made upon the farm and consumed upon the farm—do not enter into the usual reckoning.

Now, then, the test of our prosperity, our industrial, our commercial, our trade prosperity is not our foreign commerce. It is our domestic commerce, and that domestic commerce, as reported, may be 5 or 8 per cent of the total volume of our entire trade. But as I protest it is not 1 per cent, because the number of things raised on the farm and consumed on the farm, or in the adjacent village, those things are not reported at all. There is no manner in which they can be. Yet it is plain to the student of economy that when I sell a thing to myself by eating it, instead of making something else and with the proceeds buying that thing from you, I have just as much sold the chicken that I eat as the chicken which I get money for. In other words, that chicken is just as much a part of the commerce of the country as the chicken which I raised which Mr. Scott ate, and which he paid for out of the proceeds that he earned with his day's labor running a plane over a piece of wood. So we take it together. Now, when you go to the market with exchangeable goods, being for trade in that sense, let us say our foreign trade is 6 or 8 per cent of our total trade—and I think upon examination we will find it is not near that. The gentleman from Kansas recollects 3 per cent. Which one of these two great commerces has grown most rapidly under the protective tariff, the foreign one or the domestic? The domestic commerce has grown more rapidly. Which one of those two commerces is touched by a protective tariff, and which one of them is a free-trade commerce, unblighted by protectionism? Our prosperity depends upon the volume of our trade, our total trade, our entire industrial life. And to say that a law which can touch only 5 or 8 per cent of it has caused the prosperity of the country, virtually dependent upon the other 95 or 92 per cent, is an utter absurdity.

Now, what has caused the prosperity of the American people more than any other one thing in the world has been that in spite of the fact that in their folly they have attempted by tariff laws to restrict and limit foreign trade, by throttling it all they could, by interfering with the trade of the country and its commercial arteries wherever they could. Thank God for the wisdom of our forefathers, Pennsylvania is not able to "protect herself" against Mississippi, nor is Mississippi able to "protect herself" from New England, although I have seen the time when hatred was so rife that Mississippi would have cut her own throat, industrially, in order to hurt New England; and the consequence is that the world is unable to present a picture of prosperity and development comparable to ours, not even in the time of the Roman Empire. The British Empire does not present it, because the British Empire permits one part of it to "protect itself" against another part to a certain extent by protective tariffs.

So that the Empire of Great Britain, "upon which the sun does never set," has never had as many square miles, has never had as many farms, has never had as many mines, has never had as many manufactories, has never had as many enterprises of every sort freely competing with one another and letting things go as God intended they should go, abiding by the law of the survival of the industrially fit and the extinction of the industrially unfit, as the American people have. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

One other word. Now about the wages fact. In that connection you would think, then, if we had absolute free traffic and absolutely free travel, so that men could go where they pleased within our borders, and trade could go where it pleased, that wages would be the same all over the United States. There is, however, as much difference between the wages in the State of Washington and the State of Maryland up here toward the Atlantic Ocean as there is in the rate of wages in Maryland and in the poorest county of Great Britain. Why? Because there are more people in one place wanting work and less work to be done, and less people in the other place wanting work and more work to be done. Now I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. While the gentleman was on the question, I wanted to ask him if the people of this country who have found such a wholesome home market for their products could have had such a market under free trade? If the labor that created that market at home had been in foreign countries, is it not true that it would not have been so valuable a market?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We would have had a better market, taking the whole world over, than we have now, both for labor and for products. I will tell you why.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is what I want to know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will tell you why. We would have had a better labor fund, because every man in his necessary expenditures would have had to expend less, and would have had more money saved, and with that amount saved would have had more money with which to employ labor, to make, or raise, or do other things. In other words, the fund of free capital not required in order to pay necessary industrial and life expenses would have been greater, and that is the fund out of which labor is employed. The same rapid progress in certain of our industries and arts that have been the favorites of Government would not have taken place, but all the others would have thriven more and more healthfully, because not handicapped by the burden of supporting the favorites, the gentleman must understand. I am not saying that you can not create an industry. I am not saying that you can not bring an industry into life years before it naturally would come. I am merely saying that if you left things to their natural course, then when the consumer, when the people, when the nation could buy things more cheaply than they could make them, they would have just that much more money left over to hire labor to do something else with. It goes back, after all, to the fallacy that you can "create wealth." Nothing but labor operating profitably in the transformation of raw material can create wealth. You can create an industry, as I said the other day, but you can not create wealth. You can only transfer capital or induce its transfer, and induce the transfer of labor from one occupation to another.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] mentioned this fact, which I suppose is true, because a newspaper says it, and he quoted the newspaper. He said that the population out in Missouri was seeking the farms and leaving the cities. Well, if that be true, what does it mean? It means that in our abundantly prosperous United States of America to-day the unprotected industries in the country are so much more prosperous and inviting than the protected industries, which are in the cities, that people are leaving the latter to go into the former. That I leave with him for further consideration. He says: "Farmers have money in Memphis banks." Then he said he "expected they had in Yazoo City." Why, bless your heart, Mr. Chairman, the beautiful little town of Yazoo, nestling down on the banks of the river of that name, with its magnolias, its liveoaks, and its myrtles, had every business house in it except three burned down a couple of years ago, and it had one-half of its residences burned down. While the town was burning there was no hysteria, not even among the women, and within thirteen months afterwards we rather inaccurately celebrated "the anniversary" of the fire on the completion of the rebuilding of the town, and there is not an industry in the town that has as much to do with the protective tariff, except to have the people engaged in it taxed by it, as my foot had to do with the last game of football between Harvard and Yale.

Mr. BATES. There is a good market outside of it, though, is there not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and it is so far outside of it that it is nearly all in Great Britain.

Mr. BATES. The money finds its way into Yazoo City.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and more of it would find its way into Yazoo City if you did not take so much out by way of toll on the things we must buy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is not a thing in the world that Yazoo City buys that you do not tax. There is not a thing in the world that Yazoo City sells that you could aid by protectionism if you wanted to. But, by the way, I rather suspect that, being away down there in the benighted South, even if you could, you would not want to aid it very much by protection, unless you thought that you could bribe somebody down there by it to support a protective tariff and the Republican party. The worst thing about a protective tariff, as a friend said to me the other day, is that you can use it to bribe and to corrupt the friends of good government, even the opponents of the protective policy.

You can go into a community where protection has no friends, and you can get three or four fellows together, and you say, "You are making this, are you not?" "Yes." "Holland is competing with you, isn't she?" "Yes." "You are growing oranges, aren't you?" "Yes." "Spain is competing with you, isn't she?" "Yes." "Spain has a more constant sunshine and less frost than you have, hasn't she?" "Yes." "Let us protect you against the sunshine of God Almighty and keep God Almighty's frost from hurting you any."

The man you say these things to has been a friend of good government, been an honest man all his life, and yet being tempted he falls. What he has denounced in others he accepts for himself. That is the worst thing about it. The first thing you know you find a whole community bribed and in the ranks of the enemy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A gentleman stood here the other day and tried to bribe me, or flung out a bait, rather, in a polite way, and asked if it were possible for me to get the bait, wouldn't I be bribed by it? [Laughter.] The worst thing about it is that protectionists with their corrupting propositions can come into the Democratic party and say, "Here, we will put you on the favored list; we will make your little affair one of 'the great American industries;' we will put a hothouse over you; you have been cussing because we put it over the other fellow; now we are going to put it over you;" and the man in about seven cases out of ten instead of saying, "Get thee behind me, Satan; what is wrong for another man is wrong for me," turns around and says, "All right; if you are going to let me in on the ground floor that is different." That is the worst thing about it all—the most disheartening thing for a man who loves principles rather than interests.

Now, my friend from Indiana had something to say about the "Democratic charity boxes," which he says I want to establish. I was nearly forgetting that. Now, gentlemen, in the speech referred to by him, I said that I would rather live under a system where a weekly stipend, collected by direct taxation upon my property, was paid out to the needy poor, than to live under a system where daily and nightly and hourly stipends were paid out to those already unduly rich, and the treasure obtained from me by indirect taxation. I also added that I was in favor of neither system. How ingenuous of my good personal friend from Indiana, upon whose personal friendship I have so long banked, to send to the country in pamphlet form, as I suppose he proposes to do, a speech in which he represents me before the country as being in favor of a system of which I said expressly that I would rather have it than the existing one, but that I didn't want either.

He calls it a "Democratic charity box." Yes; but even if it were adopted—this so-called "Democratic charity box"—it has this advantage over a Republican charity box, you know exactly how much you put into it, and that the recipient of your charity needs it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The recipient of your Republican charity does not need it. If he were so poor as to need it, he would never have financial or political influence enough to get the charity rate out of you or out of this Congress, or of any other Congress, or any of its committees that ever sat in this country. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not want any Democratic charity boxes; I do not want any Republican charity boxes; I do not want any charity boxes of any sort. I want the people to learn the great lesson that it is the duty of the citizen to support the Government and not the duty of the Government to support, or to make prosperous, the citizen. And I repeat it now that, as between what the gentleman calls "Democratic charity boxes"—socialistic, agrarian, mad, foolish as it would be—going back to bread and circus days—I would take it in preference to a Republican charity box. I repeat again, that it may not be misunderstood, that I would rather pay taxes directly to give bread and circuses to the poor than to be taxed indirectly to give French opera and turtle soup to the enormously rich. [Laughter and applause.]

I never said I was in favor of either, and I expressly said that I was not; and I hope that when the gentleman from Indiana publishes his speech, either in the RECORD or in the pamphlet form, he will do me the justice to add that much to it.

The gentleman tells a story about a Mississippian he met at the hotel, and that the Mississippian told him that "nobody was talking about the tariff until JOHN WILLIAMS's speeches came down there." If JOHN WILLIAMS has set them to thinking about a good thing—a truth—"the same yesterday, to-day, and forever," he ought to be proud of it. That statement struck me so curiously that I asked the name of the Mississippian, and the gentleman from Indiana seemed to think that a communication of that sort was so confidential and private and sacred in its character that the name of the man could not be given. I am not in the habit of betting, like my good friend across the aisle, but I will wager a small amount that this man was one of a half score or so of Mississippi Republicans who has been up here hunting for a post-office or for an office of some sort [laughter], or else the gentleman must have been mistaken, for if there has been a time within the last ten years when Mississippi has not been thinking about the injury she is suffering hourly, weekly, monthly, and yearly under the tariff I do not remember the time.

I had intended to say something in reply to what the gentleman said about the attitude of the Democratic party in 1896, but I shall not go into that now at great length, for I have already abused the patience and the time of the House, except to say this, that the very sentence which he read from Mr. Bryan proved exactly what he denied—proved, namely, that what Mr. Bryan was asking at that time was "cheaper money." It is true, and a man would be mad to deny it, that Mr. Bryan at that time thought, that Mr. BAILEY thought, and that I thought, and that everybody else thought, that the only possible way of increasing the volume of metallic money was by restoring silver to its dignity as a standard money.

It is true that Mr. BAILEY said upon the floor that if you could restore prosperity to this country with a protective tariff and a gold standard, then it would be proof positive to the effect that we were wrong and that you were right. "And a gold standard." What did Mr. BAILEY mean? He had in mind the gold standard as it then was, as far as man could see it. What was that? An annual production of gold of about $119,000,000 about the time he made that statement. The entire production of silver at that time was $210,000,000, in round numbers, making a total of three hundred and twenty-nine millions. Now, the production of gold alone this year will top three hundred and fifty millions, so that you have not had the sort of gold standard that Mr. BAILEY was referring to, namely, a gold standard with an annual gold production of one hundred and nineteen millions. You have a gold standard with an annual gold production of two hundred and fifty millions, in round numbers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Mississippi believe that there would have been such a production of gold in this country as we have had if we had resorted to the free coinage of silver in 1896?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I don't think there would have been—quite. There would have been a greater production of gold than there was in 1890 to 1896, however. Of course, just in proportion as demand for a thing is emphasized and strengthened the supply of it, if it is a thing that can be gotten out of the ground, is going to be increased. There would have been an increase in gold and there would have been an immense increase in silver, and the increase of the two taken together would have amounted to a great deal more than the increase of the gold now, immense as that is. But the protective tariff had nothing to do with that. It did not discover the cyanide process of treating gold ore. It did not discover the mines in the Klondike.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the contention is that the protective tariff had opened the idle factories and that prosperity would come to the country when it went on a sound financial basis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, that is going back to the question that I have already discussed, and I hope I have disposed of that. If I have not, I can not. The mills closed under a Republican tariff, and were nearly all open again before the so-called "Democratic tariff" that took its place was in its turn repealed. The protective tariff had nothing to do with the increase in the production of gold to where it now is, several millions more than all the gold and silver in the world was at the time Mr. BAILEY made that utterance. It did not discover the cyanide process; it did not discover the mines in the Klondike, and it did not discover the new mines in South Africa. It had nothing to do with it that I can conceive of. I myself made a stronger statement than Mr. BAILEY's, which the gentleman might have quoted if he wished. I said, "If this country is prosperous six years with a gold standard, then I will confess that every lesson I have ever learned must be unlearned; there can not be prosperity and a descending scale of prices with a gold standard except upon the impossible proposition of a hitherto unprecedented increase in the volume of gold production"—a thing that I no more expected than I expected to fly, and nobody else expected it. The great Austrian master of the mint, whose name I can not now recall, had made an examination of all the mines of the world, and had made a report to the effect that gold production would decrease rather than increase. The cyanide process was not then thought of, and I say now if you had had what JOE BAILEY and I and all of us thought you were going to have, the annual gold crop of the year of his statement which he expected you to have, and had a right to expect you to have and had no reason to expect otherwise, you could not have had an ascending scale of prices, you could not have had the resulting encouragement to productive enterprise, you could not have had the resulting discouragement to hoarding, and consequently you would not have had prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the House in sincerity for its attention, and I want to apologize for getting on my feet in a perfectly extemporaneous way to make, from notes hastily taken, an answer to a carefully prepared—not only carefully, but well prepared—speech made by a man who is a master of the art of making a speech; and if at the beginning of my address this evening I showed some little degree of vexation at what I thought was the discourtesy shown me before that time, I want to express my regret, because I hope that it all grew out of the confusion of the moment and that nobody intended deliberately to mislead me in any way. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should at the outset apologize to this committee because I am about to break the unwritten rule of general debate in that I intend to confine my remarks to certain features of the bill now before the committee. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the first thing that would strike any Member of this House about the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill is the very small amount carried by it as an appropriation, compared with the very large amounts carried by other bills which have lately passed this House. If it can be said that Congress is extravagant in providing the appropriations that it does for keeping up our military and our naval establishment, certainly it can not be said that it is extravagant in this appropriation for the diplomatic and consular establishment. If we appropriate in round numbers $200,000,000 a year to prepare to be on terms of hostility with other countries, surely we can not be accused of being extravagant, when we appropriate as we do in this bill less than two and three quarter million dollars for the purpose of maintaining our friendly relations with them. If we are justified in spending amounts so enormous for our Army and our Navy to be prepared to war with our neighbors, surely we are justified, I think, in preparing to spend, or at least to consider the advisability of spending more than we do for the purpose of keeping at peace with our neighbors.

While I should be glad to see a larger amount appropriated, both for the consular and diplomatic features of this bill, I propose to speak about one section alone, that which provides salaries for our ambassadors and ministers. The total amount carried in this bill as salaries for all our ambassadors and ministers to foreign countries is $417,500. Certainly this does not seem a large amount. It is substantially less than the amount we heard estimated in the naval bill as the cost of maintaining a second-class cruiser for one year. But whether this be small or large, with reference to battle ships or anything else, I claim that this particular appropriation, which has been carried substantially in this bill for the last forty-five years, has been responsible for building up an office-holding class, a class most repugnant to our democratic institutions; a class of persons who, as a rule, owe their official position not to learning or to ability or to integrity, but to wealth, and wealth alone, and the reason for this is that Congress only pays to most of our diplomatic envoys an amount substantially less than the American people demand that they shall pay out to properly maintain the dignity of their position.

I do not desire to weary this House with a long series of figures, but I will call the attention of the committee to some figures that are printed as an appendix to the report on H. R. 9959, which gives the salaries paid by other governments to all their ambassadors and some of their ministers. I will merely take, for the sake of comparison, the compensation received by the British ambassador at Paris and the compensation received by our ambassador at Paris, and, generally speaking, the same comparison will hold true with reference to the amount paid by us and by other nations in all the capitals of Europe and of the world where we have ambassadors and ministers. Before speaking of this, it might be well to say that our system is to compensate our diplomatic envoys in only one way—that is, directly by paying them a salary. All other nations compensate their ambassadors and ministers in a number of indirect ways, which I shall illustrate by the compensation of the British ambassador at Paris.

All other nations, substantially, in addition to the direct salary, compensate their representatives in various indirect ways, furnishing them in almost all instances with an official residence, which is kept up at government expense. Where they do not own or lease on long terms official residences, full allowance is always made for the rent of temporary quarters. In addition to this, an allowance is always made for keeping up the establishment of the diplomatic envoy. In many cases a special allowance is made for official entertaining, and in almost all countries a civil pension is provided for their representative after service for a certain number of years. The ambassador of the United States at Paris gets $17,500 a year as a salary and no allowance whatever. Upon this he is supposed to rent a suitable residence; to furnish it and keep it in order; to do a certain amount, not necessarily large, but a certain amount of official entertaining, and, above all, to be prepared at all times to receive properly American citizens residing in or passing through Paris. The British ambassador at Paris receives a salary of $45,000 a year. He is furnished with an official residence, and I am informed that the rent of the British embassy at Paris, or the rent of a building equivalent to the embassy, would be somewhere between thirty-five and forty thousand dollars a year at least. In addition to this, his establishment is kept up for him. He is provided with a certain number of servants; he is allowed a fund, as I am informed, though I can not be accurate upon this point, of about $6,000 a year for official entertaining, and at the close of twenty years' service he is pensioned at the rate of something like $10,000 a year for life. In other words, to use round figures, the compensation of the British ambassador at Paris is considerably over $100,000 a year.

Now, it is evident that one of these two systems must be wrong. Either the compensation of the British ambassador is grossly excessive or else the compensation of our ambassador is grossly inadequate. If the first be true, then many an English ambassador must have grown rich off his salary. Let us see whether this is a fact. Lord Dufferin, who was for many years the British ambassador at Paris and one of the most prominent statesmen in England, resigned, giving as his reason that he was unable to afford to keep up the position, not having a large private fortune. The same position was offered to two other English statesmen of prominence, who refused on the same ground. Now, if $100,000 a year is not sufficient to maintain the ambassador from Great Britain in a proper way, surely it is idle to contend that $17,500 is sufficient to maintain our ambassador. Does any man contend that he can keep up the position which the American people demand he shall keep up for anything less than many times that amount? Does not everybody know, who knows the facts, that the rent alone of a residence anywhere nearly suitable would be, at least, that amount? As a matter of fact, for many years our ambassador at Paris has paid somewhere between twenty and twenty-five thousand dollars a year in rent alone.

Now, where does the money come from that pays the difference between what the Congress allows our ambassador and the amount that it costs him, and must necessarily cost him, to live properly unless it comes out of his own pocket? If he can not afford to pay the difference himself, then he can not accept the position. In other words, no man who can not afford to pay from his own private fortune the difference between the amount that Congress pays him and the amount the people demand that he shall pay out can ever be an ambassador from this country to any great world power. Some men have tried this and have met with disaster.

And I desire now to recall a case which happened as long ago as the Administration of President Hayes, when our mission at Paris was a legation and not an embassy, with its largely increased responsibilities and expenses. President Hayes appointed as minister to Paris General Noyes, of Ohio. General Noyes, as many will recall, was a man of the highest ability and learning, a distinguished officer in the war, and afterwards governor of Ohio. He was worth, I am informed, in the neighborhood of $150,000 when he accepted the appointment. When he retired, after four years in Paris, where he lived in a very simple way, in a way certainly not less dignified than was proper, and returned to his home in Cincinnati, this fortune had entirely evaporated. He was for the rest of his life practically an object of charity.

I know it to be a fact, and I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] can testify to this, that his only means of support practically—he having spent most of his life in the service of his country and being unable to build up a law practice—was to take small cases that were referred to him by lawyers, and I think I am not wrong in saying, and if I am——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, General Noyes told me that after his return from Paris he had to borrow money in New York by telegraph with which to get home to Cincinnati. He had spent all of his money. I had met him before, and he did not live extravagantly. He no more than maintained the position we would have all insisted upon in his administration of the office.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And more, when he died his friends were compelled to take up a subscription to give him a decent burial. Of course, this lamentable——

Mr. KEIFER. He was a man of good habits, too, all his life.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, unquestionably. Of course, this lamentable ending to a noble life would not have been had General Noyes refused the appointment as minister to France. Had he refused the call of the President and the call of duty he might have rounded out his life certainly in comfort, if not in comparative affluence. But he chose rather to do what he conceived was his duty to his country. He chose to be a patriot.

General Noyes had one failing as an American diplomat. He did not have the price, and he fell a victim to our diplomatic system. This is but one instance, for many other men far more wealthy than he have seriously impoverished themselves by undertaking to represent this country abroad; and these instances simply go to prove what is known to-day of all men, that no one but a very rich man, even as riches are counted nowadays, can be an ambassador of the United States in any European capital, and no man who is not at least comparatively wealthy, as we speak of comparative wealth in these days, can be a minister of the United States at any important diplomatic post. In other words, these offices, among the most dignified and important in the gift of the American people, are for rich men and rich men alone. This Republic, the greatest, the most democratic Republic which has ever existed, has to-day an office-holding aristocracy, an aristocracy more repugnant to our ideals of free institutions than any aristocracy even in Russia, an aristocracy purely and solely of the dollar.

Progressive as this country has been in many ways, in all other ways we have been, I think, the most backward of all great nations anywhere near approaching us in greatness in providing proper compensation for our high public officials. Our business men, our professional men, men of ability in all the walks of life and subordinate Government officials are paid higher salaries than the men of corresponding position in any other country; but our high officials, the men upon whom the great responsibilities of government rest, are paid much less compensation than men of like position in any other country. The salary of the President of the United States is but a fraction of the salary of the President of our great sister Republic—France—upon whom only a fraction of the responsibility rests. The salaries of our Supreme Court judges might well be described as beggarly when compared with the salaries of judges in other great countries.

The salaries of our Cabinet officers I am willing to describe as beggarly, compared with what this country can well afford and what it ought to pay them. But this fact is true, that no matter how inadequate the salaries that I have mentioned may be, the fact remains that the positions can be held and are held by poor men. But the office of ambassador, who, with the sole exception of the President, is the public official who is the representative of all the American people, can not be filled and never will be filled under our present system by any except a very rich man. I care not how able a man may be, how learned in international law, how experienced in diplomacy, how celebrated in statesmanship, if with all these qualifications he does not possess the one absolutely necessary qualification of great wealth, he is not eligible for appointment to any great diplomatic post. So well has this fact become recognized that there have been of late many instances of men whose sole claim, frankly stated, was that of great wealth, who were serious applicants for appointment as ambassadors.

In speaking of these conditions in some remarks that I made last year upon this general subject I made use of the following language. I said:

> Should these conditions continue, it is not impossible to imagine that the day may come when training for diplomacy shall consist not in the study of history and international law, but a research into the methods of manufacturing steel, converting that noble animal the pig into food products and tooth brushes, or in refining oil.

I think subsequent developments have proved that I left out a very important qualification, and I now desire to amend by adding, after the words "refining oil," the words "or the life-insurance business." [Laughter and applause.]

Every day we hear on both sides of this Chamber that the most serious menace to this country is an aristocracy of wealth. The people are determined that the great public utilities, the great industries of this country, shall not become concentrated in the hands of a few men. Is it not more offensive to our ideals that our high offices should become so concentrated? This being the spirit of the people, shall we continue to support an office-holding class, a dollar class, the very ideal of the aristocracy of wealth? Shall the Congress continue to tie the hands of the President and circumscribe his choice in filling great diplomatic positions to men whose only qualification, absolutely necessary qualification, is that "they have the price?"

I do not mean to say that most of our present ambassadors are unfit men, or that they are not otherwise qualified than by the possession of great wealth for the posts they fill. This country is fortunate in having had at its command men of wealth who are also well qualified otherwise to represent this country abroad. But even in their case, is it fair to force them to spend largely from their private fortunes in keeping up the position that the people demand? It is too late now to allude to our diplomatic service as a luxury and not a necessity, to talk about Jeffersonian simplicity, to say that we got along perfectly well before we ever had ambassadors. The fact is that the House and Senate, by a unanimous vote, created the office of ambassador, and they created it in such a way that we could not now decrease the number of our ambassadors if we would. Far from the number diminishing, it will continue to increase.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. With great pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks there are any embassies at which the salaries covered by this bill are sufficient?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am going to take up that matter later. I would say, though, that undoubtedly our ambassador to Mexico can live on his salary as carried by this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if he means that no other ambassador can live on the salary carried in this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think that is a fair statement.

It is getting more and more important, as this country continues to grow every day in importance as a world power, that we should be represented abroad by competent men; and if we desire to get those competent men we must change our system. There are two ways by which this might be brought about. We might increase the salaries, but, as I have endeavored to point out, to do that—to place our ambassador upon the same footing as his fellow-ambassadors from other countries—in a great many cases, would mean quadrupling the salaries carried by this bill. Another way, and the way in which I advocate that it be done, is indirectly. The salary system provided in this bill is absolutely illogical. We provide the same salaries for all ambassadors, utterly regardless of the different conditions prevailing at the different capitals to which they are accredited. It is utterly absurd to pay our ambassador to Mexico the same salary that we pay our ambassador to England. We provide the same salary to our ambassador to France that we do to our ambassador to Japan, utterly regardless of the fact that in Paris the cost of living is higher than anywhere else in the world, while in Japan it is comparatively reasonable, and utterly regardless of the fact also that at Tokyo we provide our ambassador with an official residence.

I might pause at this time to state what occurred at the embassy at Tokio, which was then a legation, shortly before the arrival of what was known as the "Taft party." It seems that two days before our arrival in Tokio the ceiling of the dining room fell down, and under our enlightened system there was no fund upon which our ambassador could draw to repair that ceiling, and he therefore had to pay the cost out of his own pocket. Think, gentlemen, had this occurred two days later! Conceive of that ceiling falling upon the honored head of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], upon the head of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], upon the head of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], or upon the head of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it is not also a fact that at the time he refers to the legation building was very much in need of paint; looked shabby and old and worn, and remained so for the reason he states—that the minister had no fund to draw upon to make the necessary repairs?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I so understand it.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand the gentleman to say that the United States owns the embassy at Tokio?

Mr. LONGWORTH. We have owned that property for some years.

Mr. GARRETT. How did we get it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. We bought it. Congress, in 1896, upon the recommendation of the minister then at Tokio, authorized an appropriation for the purchase of that property, and we bought it for $16,000, and I am informed now that it was worth an amount very largely in excess of that. But it seems to me that the true solution of this question lies not in increased salaries, but rather in another direction. I would have this Government acquire a suitable official residence in every important capital where we have envoys of at least the rank of minister plenipotentiary. While I do not claim that this would be a universal panacea for all of our ills, I do claim that it would solve many of the difficulties; that it would materially enlarge the field of qualifications for diplomatic service, and that it would bring it within the reach of men of moderate means.

I do not by any means advocate that the Government should acquire palaces or that our representatives should attempt to outstrip in luxury of living the representatives of any other country. I am utterly opposed to that, but I do advocate that this country should acquire dignified and proper residences for its representatives in foreign capitals.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With great pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the gentleman introduced a bill to carry into effect the suggestion he has made?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have.

Mr. SCOTT. Does that bill provide for an addition to the consular agents?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The bill that I have introduced and to which I shall call attention later has nothing whatever to do with the consular service.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the Committee on Foreign Affairs given any attention to the improving of the condition which exists, for example, at Hongkong, where I am advised that the American consulate has two commercial attachés, as compared with forty-five at the disposal of the English consul and 145 under the direction of the Japanese consul. I wondered if that committee had given any consideration to the question as to whether that condition ought not to be changed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am informed that there is a bill in Congress—I do not know by whom introduced—that provides an appropriation of a million dollars for consulates in the East, applying principally to Hongkong, Shanghai, Canton, and Yokohama. I might say that the consulate at Shanghai, upon which this Government now has a lease—when that lease runs out we can not acquire it for less than three times the amount we are now paying for it. If we had an appropriation which would be available to purchase the property now, we would save at least two-thirds of what it will cost us in the end.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to answer the question of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will answer the question of the gentleman. There is a bill before the committee now, at the suggestion of the Secretary of State, which provides that a certain sum shall be set aside from the indemnity fund which we got as a result of the damages of the Boxers' insurrection in China and which is practically an unexpected gift to the nation—that a part of that fund shall be used for the erection of houses for our consulates in the Far East. That bill was in the hands of the subcommittee, was reported favorably to the main committee, and is held by the main committee for more specific information from the State Department as to what they propose to do.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, with the premission of the gentleman from Ohio, I would like to say that while I have heard the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with great satisfaction, yet it seems to me that this hardly reaches the point I had in my mind. We are reaching out after foreign trade, especially in the Orient, and it stands to reason that a nation which can go after that trade, with practically unlimited means in the way of commercial attachés and consulates can do vastly more in acquiring it than a nation which limits itself and attempts to do the work with wholly inadequate means. It seems absurd that the great nation of the United States should attempt to acquire the trade of China with two consular attachés at the greatest export port in the Empire, whereas the other countries have unlimited means.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree absolutely with the gentleman. I know the situation at our consulate at Yokohama, which is now, I believe, the second largest port of export with which we have commercial relations. In our consulate there we have not a telephone, we have not a typewriter, and we have only one clerk.

Every paper has to be written out in longhand, and we have not enough money out of the contingent fund to provide postage stamps for our invoices. While I appreciate the necessity for an appropriation for the purpose of increasing our consulate facilities, the point that I am trying to bring out is that while many of the salaries of our consuls are inadequate, nevertheless they can not be considered as being an office-holding class on account of their own private fortunes. For that reason I think that the necessity is greater to provide embassies and legations than it is to provide consulates, although, in my opinion, both are necessary.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. I would state to the gentleman that a short time ago a bill was passed reorganizing the consular service, in which the salaries were increased considerably, and in this bill a considerable increase is made in the amount of money for hire of clerks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is fair to state, nevertheless, that while they have increased the salaries they have cut off certain fees that have heretofore been received, and the result is that there has been no practical increase.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman is mistaken about that, I think.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have gone very carefully over a large number of the consulates and I find that the increase has just about met that which during the last two or three years was the average of the fees that came to the consul—that is, the unofficial fees.

Mr. FLOOD. In nearly every case there was an increase. Sometimes it was very slight, but in nearly every case there was an increase.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was very slight; very slight, indeed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As I said before, our ambassadors and ministers are the direct representatives of the whole American people. Is it not proper, then, that the American people should provide them with residences which will comport with the dignity of their high office? Then, at least, the wealth of the particular incumbent would not be apparent from external appearance, as it now always is. To-day the American embassy or legation is sometimes a flat, sometimes a boarding house, and sometimes a palace. There is nothing in the least degree official about the residences of our diplomatic envoys.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. In what capitals of foreign countries have we residences, if any?

Mr. LONGWORTH. We have residences in Tokio, Japan; Pekin, China, and Seoul, Korea. We have consular residences in Tahiti; at Tangier, Morocco, and at Bangkok, in Siam.

Mr. SCOTT. And we have them there simply because it was absolutely necessary to erect them in order to afford a decent living place for the occupants.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, in those countries where exterritoriality prevails it was a necessity. I desire at this point to refer to the bill which I have introduced upon this subject. It is very simple. It authorizes the Secretary of State to acquire by purchase, lease, or otherwise official buildings, which shall be used as embassies and legations and official residences by our ambassadors and ministers. It appropriates the sum of $5,000,000 therefor. This bill has had the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and is now on the Calendar. I regret that I am not making this speech upon the consideration of that bill. I fear, however, that if I waited for its consideration the members of this committee might not have the inestimable privilege of hearing me upon it. Many other bills are before this House appropriating large sums of money. As to the necessity of these appropriations each Member of the House must judge for himself, and I fear that it may come to pass that this House in its wisdom may adjudge the necessity for other appropriations greater than for that provided for in House bill 9959.

In my opinion, however, there is no appropriation which can outweigh in importance one which will go far to remedy a condition so repugnant to the ideals of the American people, a condition under which certain offices are for the few, for a small class set apart from their fellows, not by reason of their ability, learning, or statesmanship, but on account of their private means. The expenditure of this amount would not create a large fixed charge upon the annual expenses of the Government. It is not an investment of money which would decrease in value as the years go by, but on the contrary an investment the value of which would increase and in all probability increase enormously. This has certainly been the case with those nations which years ago adopted the policy of owning their embassies and legations in foreign capitals. Take, for instance, the British embassy here in Washington. I am informed that the British Government paid for that property when it was purchased 40 cents a square foot. To-day the property is worth not less than $10 a square foot. The same thing is true of the experience of other nations, and it is true of our experience in those limited instances where we have adopted this policy.

Our legation property, now an embassy, at Tokyo cost $16,000 gold, and there is now on it an annual ground rental of $100 a year. That property to-day, I was told in Tokyo, was worth at least $50,000 gold. In Seoul, Korea, we bought our legation property, which is now used as our consulate, for the ridiculously small sum of $5,000. That property, I was informed when I was in Seoul last summer, was worth not less than $40,000. Our legation property in Peking, while I do not remember the figures, has undoubtedly largely increased in value. I venture to say that the expenditure of $5,000,000 in buying, or leasing upon long terms, real estate in these capitals at the end of twenty years would produce an investment at least double the original cost. But whether this be true or not, it certainly would bring about this result, that in every important capital there would be an official residence, a building over which the American flag would always float. Then the man appointed by the President of the United States to represent this country would not have to decide how much rent he could afford to pay. He would not have to be a house hunter for a large part of his term. It would not then be necessary to remove the archives and the great and important papers belonging to this Government from place to place, depending upon where the particular incumbent happened to live. Then the man of modest means, the man who most truly represents the bone and sinew of this Republic, would not be placed at a disadvantage as compared with another man who happens to have more money. Then, from all external appearances, the wealth or the poverty of the particular incumbent would not be apparent. Then we would not hear of cases of men impoverishing themselves, as in the case of Governor Noyes, nor, on the other hand, would we see that vulgar display of ostentatiousness in living which we have sometimes seen in the past. No longer, then, would a condition exist under which these offices of the highest responsibility and dignity could be given only to rich men, and no longer would there be a single office within the gift of the American people that would not be within the reach of any American citizen. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL REQUESTS.

The Clerk read the following personal requests:

Mr. KNAPP asks indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

Mr. STERLING asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Vachtel Carmen, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William J. Bradshaw, bill H. R. 18397, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the requests be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, in response to the inquiry of the House, a report as to the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion laws—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Richard D. Lamb, for himself and as administrator of estate of Ira M. Lamb, heirs of Ira M. Lamb, and Caroline, his wife, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of A. G. McDonald, administrator of estate of Robert H. Green, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Assistant Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case Abram Jones against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HENRY of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19516) to create a new division of the western judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Del Rio, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4401); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9841) to correct the military record of James H. Davis, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 4400); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 19607) for the acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments in Guam, Samoa, and the Canal Zone to affect lands in the District of Columbia and other Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAW: A bill (H. R. 19608) directing the Secretary of War to cause an examination and survey to be made of Coney Island channel and other channels adjacent thereto—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 19609) to promote the construction of good roads and the efficiency of the postal service in the States and Territories of the United States—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 19610) to provide a service pension for survivors of the late war of the rebellion, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska: A resolution (H. Res. 538) requesting certain information from the Judiciary Committee respecting the preparation of an index to the Statutes at Large—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 24, 1906.

Prayer by Rev. ROBERT M. MOORE, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BERRY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEAN presented the petition of Mary M. Crawford, of Glenridge, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a children's bureau in the Department of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Municipal Art League, of East Orange, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Princeton, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to remove the duty on denaturized alcohol; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT presented petitions of sundry citizens of West Hebron, Belcher, Hartford, Argyle, and Salem, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to investigate the existing conditions in the Kongo Free State; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Local Grange No. 610, of Fayetteville; of Oswego Grange, No. 175, of Oswego, Patrons of Husbandry, and of John P. Hines, of New York City, all in the State of New York, praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a memorial of the Connecticut Library Association, of Meriden, Conn., remonstrating against any change in the existing law permitting the free importation of books, maps, music, photographs, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Ypsilanti Civic Improvement Association, of the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to establish national forest reserves in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PILES presented the petition of James Hart and sundry other citizens of Auburn, Wash., and the petition of George Dysert and sundry other citizens of Centralia, Wash., praying for the removal of the internal-revenue tax on denaturized alcohol; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Mechanicsburg, Pa., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of Local Grange No. 1141, of Media; of Beaver Run Grange, No. 813, of Alderson; of East Lynn Grange, No. 1263, of Westchester; of Troups Creek Grange, No. 981, of Wellsboro, and of South Auburn Grange, No. 1188, of Skinners Eddy, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called "pure-food bill;" which were ordered to lie on the table.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. BERRY. I report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 16950) to enlarge the authority of the Mississippi River Commission in making allotments and expenditures of funds appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Mississippi River. It is a very short bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that any funds which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated by Congress for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of the Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for levees upon any part of said river between the Head of the Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4698) for preservation of American antiquities, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Section 2 authorizes the President of the United States, in his discretion, to declare by public proclamation historic landmarks, historic and prehistoric structures, and other objects of historic or scientific interest that are situated upon the lands owned or controlled by the Government of the United States to be national monuments, and may reserve as a part thereof parcels of land, the limits of which in all cases shall be confined to the smallest area compatible with the proper care and management of the objects to be protected, but when such objects are situated upon a tract covered by a bona fide unperfected claim or held in private ownership the tract, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the proper care and management of the object, may be relinquished to the Government, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept the relinquishment of such tracts in behalf of the Government of the United States.

Permits for the examination of ruins, the excavation of archæological sites, and the gathering of objects of antiquity upon the lands under their respective jurisdictions may be granted by the Secretaries of the Interior, Agriculture, and War to institutions which they may deem properly qualified to conduct such examination, excavation, or gathering, subject to such rules and regulations as they may prescribe: Provided, That the examinations, excavations, and gatherings are undertaken for the benefit of reputable museums, universities, colleges, or other recognized scientific or educational institutions, with a view to increasing the knowledge of such objects and that the gatherings shall be made for permanent preservation in public museums.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF BRASS CANNON.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 98) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish brass cannon to the General Howell Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, of Woodbury, N. J., to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on the Philippines I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 6243) to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled "An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for coinage system in the Philippine Islands." I give notice that to-morrow I shall call up the bill for action, as immediate action is necessary upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to what in some way has become a practice and which has no force under the rule. When a Senator simply says he will call up a bill if he can on a certain day, there is no reason why notice of that should be entered on any paper. The rules do not provide for anything of that kind. It does not give anyone any additional chance. I ask that hereafter no such notices be entered. They only encumber the record.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to briefly state what the bill is which he proposes to call up to-morrow. I simply want it for general information.

Mr. LODGE. The price of silver has risen so steadily of late, and seems likely to rise still more, that it will attain a point at which, under the ratio established by law in the Philippine Islands, the silver peso would become an undervalued coin, and would leave the islands, depriving them of their currency, as their only currency is silver currency. The purpose of the bill is to enable, under proper restrictions, a reduction in the weight and fineness of the Philippine silver peso, so as to check the movement of the coins out of the islands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18026) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn., reported it without amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4546) ceding to the city of Canon City, Colo., certain lands for park purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8410) to authorize the Charleston Light and Water Company to construct and maintain a dam across Goose Creek, in Berkeley County, in the State of South Carolina, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19473) authorizing the use of the waters in Coosa River, at Lock No. 4, in Alabama, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19374) to prohibit shanghaiing in the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3702) for the relief of the Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5075) for acquiring by condemnation and dedicating as public parking certain triangles on Sixteenth street, in the city of Washington, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 17758) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota. This is a little local bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would withhold his request until we get through with morning business. I will not object to it then, but I am going to object to bills coming in during the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. As far as I am concerned, the Senator can call it up immediately after the morning business is over.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 52) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the board of trustees of Vincennes University, Vincennes, Ind., such obsolete arms and other military equipments now in possession of said university, to be used in military instruction, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2987) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Nathan Mendenhall, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13735) for the relief of John Purkapile, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13245) to correct the military record of Henry Gude, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17982) to grant to Charles H. Cornell, his assigns and successors, the right to abut a dam across the Niobrara River on the Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, Nebr., and to construct and operate a trolley or electric railway line and telegraph and telephone line across said reservation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 45) authorizing a commission to examine the battlefields around Petersburg, Va., and report whether it is advisable to establish a battlefield park, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5149) to grant an honorable discharge to William C. Haskell, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for the purpose of giving certain parties who feel that they have a right to be heard a hearing on the bill (S. 43) to extend the lines of the Capital Traction Company, and in accordance with a notice that I gave yesterday I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia for further consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to recommit to the District of Columbia Committee the bill (S. 43) to extend the lines of the Capital Traction Company.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I have no disposition to oppose the fullest inquiry into the affairs of the public-service corporations of the District of Columbia. I had the misfortune some months ago to be named as the chairman of a subcommittee to go into this question, to consider certain bills that had been introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I have been under the impression for a long time that the public-service corporations of the District were not paying their just proportion of taxes in the District, and as I proceeded to investigate the question I became more thoroughly convinced that I was right on that question.

So, Mr. President, as the chairman of the subcommittee appointed to go into this matter, and having the sanction of at least a portion of the subcommittee, I reported to the full committee a bill containing a provision which would increase the taxes of these corporations.

It is true, as the honorable chairman of the committee said yesterday, that the full committee was not unanimous in reporting this bill to the Senate; but the majority of the committee who voted authorized the report. That report was made by me yesterday.

Now, on the question of hearings, I do not believe that the committee will succeed in getting information on the subject additional to that which already exists in documents which have been printed.

Without referring particularly to the report which I had the honor to make yesterday, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that when the bills came to me as chairman of the subcommittee, I found that it was difficult to get full information on the subject. So I addressed a letter to the heads of the street railway corporations, inclosing a list of seventeen questions which I thought it was proper that they should answer. It took something like a month to get complete answers to those questions, and indeed I did not succeed even at the end of that time in getting satisfactory answers to some of them.

The answers that I did secure to the questions I had published in a document, which was printed and can be had by Senators. If we should have the most extended hearings on the part of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I doubt whether we would obtain any further information on the subject than is contained in the document to which I refer.

The answers to the questions are here set out in many instances at great length. Some of the managers of the railroad corporations have gone into the question of taxation fully. I doubt if they would be able to go into it any further if they were heard for a week than they have gone into it in the answers they have made to these questions.

I do not want to be considered as resisting the motion made by the Senator, but I do not believe that anything would be gained by recommitting the bill. There is on the desk of Senators this morning, or on the files, the report made on yesterday; and, as I said, this additional document containing the statements of the railroads themselves can be had by Senators if they desire to send for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in reply to the Senator from South Dakota. Early in December last I introduced two bills to extend the lines of the two existing railroad corporations to the Union Station. That is all those bills contemplated. It is well known to every Senator that before long the traveling public are to be deposited in the new station. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad informs me that because of certain changes which must be made in their tracks, and certain fills which are necessary, that road will be landing passengers there probably in September or October next.

I felt that it was the duty of Congress to pass those bills promptly, extending the lines of these railroads to the Union Station. The railroads are to get no benefit from it. They will not have a single passenger more from one station than they have from two, while it will cost them between $800,000 and $900,000 to extend their lines as contemplated.

There was one controverted question in one of those bills, and that was the proposed cross-town line on M street, which was fought over here last year. The Senator from North Dakota was chairman of a subcommittee last year to consider that bill, and I felt that inasmuch as that question was involved it was proper that these bills should be sent to the same subcommittee. They were referred to the subcommitte in January. On the 24th of March I addressed a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee, after he had had the bills two months, saying that it was very important that we should have legislation on this subject, and subsequently I addressed him another letter, urging the necessity for early action.

After four months the subcommittee made a report, substituting for the two bills committed to them a bill that not only deals with the question submitted, but which proposes to almost quadruple the taxes, not only upon the railroad corporations, but upon the gas company, the electric light company, and the telephone company of the District of Columbia. In other words, the subcommittee thought that in dealing with the question of extending the street railroad lines to the Union Station we should take up the question of taxation of the several public-utility corporations in the District of Columbia.

The subcommitte reported to the full committee a few days ago, and nine members of the committee voted, five in favor of reporting the bill and four against, and two members did not vote. Since then three members of the committee who either voted in favor of reporting the bill or did not vote at all have said to me that they acted under a misapprehension.

Now, Mr. President, I feel that these corporations have some rights. They were not given a hearing before the subcommittee. In fact, I think outside of the railroad corporations they had no knowledge that any such legislation as this was contemplated, and it is manifest that such a bill as that should not be enacted under such circumstances. If it is desirable to go into the question of taxation, a matter that the late Senator McMillan and some other members of the committee considered with great care when the present system was adopted, let a bill be introduced. I assure the Senate that no Senator will give it more careful attention than I will, with a view to doing exact justice between the corporations and the people of the District of Columbia.

Now, Mr. President, that is all there is to this matter. I submit that the bill should go back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator has spoken of the time which elapsed between the date when these bills were referred to the subcommittee and the date when the subcommitte reported. It is unnecessary, I think, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have had a great deal of very strenuous work before the Senate. My own Committee on Public Lands, meeting every week, dealing with a variety of great questions, is enough for any one man to attend to. In addition to that the Finance Committee, of which I am a member, has had numerous meetings. The Agricultural Committee, handling a great appropriation bill, has been obliged to meet repeatedly. I have been under the necessity of attending the meetings of all these committees in addition to the weekly meetings of the District of Columbia Committee.

So in considering the railroad question I had but very little time to devote to it. I was under the necessity of taking the papers and documents to my home and working on them at night in order to accomplish what I have accomplished here. I say to the Senator, and I say to the Senate, that there has been no purpose of delay here on the part of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, it was the most difficult thing to secure a meeting of the subcommittee, in the first instance. The members of the subcommittee said to me, "Go on and perfect the bill; make your report, and we will support it." When I submitted the questions which I thought should be asked of these companies to the members of the subcommittee and to the Senator who is chairman of the full committee, they acquiesced in the idea that the questions should be asked and that answers should be had to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator does not quite correctly represent me. The Senator, of course, as a member of the subcommittee, could act independently and seek such information as he chose. He said to me he was going to ask certain questions of the corporations. I said to him that that was his privilege; but that I had anything to do with the matter beyond that certainly does not comport with the facts.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Oh, no; I have not said that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, if the Senator will permit me, he says he has been overworked. So have we all. The proposition involved in the bill that was submitted to the Senator, to extend the lines of these railroads to the Union Station, would not have taken very long to consider if the Senator had confined himself to the question which was submitted to him.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is very true. If we were to confine ourselves to precisely what the railroad companies want, and that is what was contained in these bills, of course we never would increase the taxes of these companies.

The present tax law, Mr. President, under which these companies pay was put into a bill incorporating one of these street railroad companies fifteen years ago, and it has never been changed. So I make the statement to show that there has been no undue delay, when we consider the amount of work that has been thrown upon all Senators and the extraordinary character of the measures that have been before the Senate—the railroad rate bill, for instance, which was here for more than sixty days.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say about this question at the present time.

Mr. PATTERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to recommit to the Committee on the District of Columbia Senate bill 43, to extend the lines of the Capital Traction Company.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I hope that the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire will not prevail. I think that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] and the subcommittee of which he is chairman have done the city of Washington and the Senate and the country a distinct good in making this report and incorporating the views of the subcommittee on the bill the passage of which the committee asks.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Before the Senator proceeds——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to say in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire that the bill proposes to quadruple the taxes of these corporations that the statement is far from being correct. I think the figures given in the report will convince Senators of that fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. On that point, the Senator knows that they pay 4 per cent on their gross earnings now, and he proposes to add 12 per cent on their net earnings. If he will figure it up, I think he will find I was not far out of the way.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have figured it very thoroughly. I call the attention of Senators to the report that I made yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, the Senator from North Dakota claims accuracy. The Senator states that the market value of the outstanding securities of these companies is $70,000,000. On the 19th day of May I had a careful table prepared showing the par value and the market value of the securities on that day, only five days ago, and the market value was $45,000,000 on that day.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The statement is made by the Senator that I have reported the market values of these securities at $70,000,000. In reply to that statement I will say that such a statement was made in a general way in the printed report of the subcommittee, which was laid before the full committee. It was, as I said, a general statement, and I am free to admit that it was considerably exaggerated. But I want to call the attention of the Senate to this fact: The Senator has stated that the par value——

Mr. GALLINGER. The market value.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator has stated that the market value of these securities is $45,000,000. In the statement to which he first referred the par value is given at $45,525,000. This statement is dated at the comptroller's office May 21, 1906. I do not know what comptroller that is. The Senator will explain what comptroller it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that it was on the paper. I will ascertain.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not know who made that statement.

But, Mr. President, from the sworn statements of these companies, made to Congress under the law for 1905, I find that their capital stock paid in was $31,044,990, and that their funded indebtedness at that date was $18,444,100, or, in other words, a total of $49,489,090, upon which dividends and interest were paid in 1905 of $2,067,200. The total receipts of these companies for that year were $3,711,745. The total taxes paid by them for that year were $148,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I read the report of the Senator from North Dakota very carefully, and I came to the conclusion after reading it that the companies are not paying the tax that they should pay, and as a small stockholder in the Capital Traction Company I so made the statement in the committee. I was immediately waited upon the evening after my vote to assure me that my vote in that committee was injuring my own stock in that company. I want to say that if I should lose every dollar of my stock in the company I would vote for what I think to be right. I do not believe these companies are paying their just share of taxation in this city as compared with what the citizens are paying.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In response, if the Senator from Colorado will allow me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me just a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the discussion of taxation in this District comes up it seems to me that we will be able to show that, while the taxes perhaps ought to be increased somewhat, these companies are paying a pretty fair tax. But I do not think this is the time and place for it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, in response to a question asked me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], as to what the net receipts of these companies are, I will call his attention to page 2 of the report I made on yesterday, where it will appear that the net earnings of the Capital Traction Company in 1905 were $980,244; of the Washington Railway and Electric Company, $683,311; of the Anacostia and Potomac, $144,311; of the Brightwood Company, $833; of the City and Suburban Railway, $148,067; of the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railroad, $340; a total of $1,957,107.

Mr. SPOONER. Gross earnings?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; net earnings.

Mr. SPOONER. They are paying now on the gross earnings.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They are paying on the gross earnings 4 per cent, under the law passed fifteen years ago. The amendment in the bill which I have reported provides for 12 per cent on the net earnings.

Mr. GALLINGER. In addition to 4 per cent on the gross earnings.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In addition to the 4 per cent. Under that provision the railway companies will pay $234,000 more taxes than they are paying now. They pay now $151,000, and they would pay in addition $234,000. The other public-service corporations would pay, of course, in addition to what they pay now. The Washington Gaslight Company would pay $66,197 more annually, predicated upon their business for 1905. The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, with net receipts last year of about $32,000, would pay only $3,944 additional tax under a net-earnings tax scheme.

So, Mr. President, the public-service corporations in the District, with net earnings in 1905 of $2,541,627, would pay additional taxes to the amount of $304,995.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, an examination of the report made by the Senator from North Dakota shows that all of the information which can be of any substantial value to the Senate in passing upon this bill has been secured by him from the officers of the companies themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are three very large corporations that I understand have never been interrogated at all and which had no knowledge of this proposed legislation.

Mr. PATTERSON. To which companies does the Senator refer?

Mr. GALLINGER. The gaslight company, the telephone company, and the electric-light company.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, this report shows a state of facts that ought to be pretty clearly understood. First, it shows that the bonded indebtedness of these several corporations amounts to about $18,000,000 and that the par value of the stock amounts to about $31,000,000. In this case, as in all such cases, especially where these corporations and utilities are in thrifty, growing cities, the stock and the bonded indebtedness represent the cost of construction. In these Washington corporations, then, if those who originally incorporated the companies yet own the stock, they would own $31,000,000 worth of stock which never cost them a dollar. Not a dollar of individual money outside of the money that is borrowed upon the bonds goes into investments of this character; and that is by reason of the immense value of the franchises, the possession of which enables them to construct and operate these utilities and enables them to go into the money market and secure such vast sums of money, secured practically by the revenues from these institutions.

It is only within the past ten or twelve years that the real value of these great municipal franchises has commenced to be understood at all. Until a very few years ago these franchises were given out to those who applied for them. There was such a halo of public benefactions created by the applicants that the cities seemed glad to turn them over to private corporations that they might have the benefit of the utilities the corporations would afford.

But, Mr. President, when the attention of thoughtful men was turned to this particular character of investment and this particular character of operation, it was discovered that in almost every instance when the value of the property that was to be determined by their revenue-bearing qualities—under investigation it was learned that the franchise end of it, which cost the original promoters nothing at all, constituted at least two-thirds of the real value. So in the case of these corporations in the District of Columbia, you have a bonded indebtedness of $18,000,000, which represents the present value of all the material and all the construction necessary for the operation of these roads, and $31,000,000 of stock, upon which dividends are being annually paid, that is clear profit—"velvet," in the language of the street—and that really should be the property of the District of Columbia, and the District of Columbia should be reaping the benefits from not only their ownership, but their possession.

Mr. President, the possession of these franchises by private corporations in American municipalities is the cause of 95 per cent of the municipal corruption that has made municipal government in the United States a stench in the nostrils of decent people. The reason of it is that the franchises are of such vast value and the people are in such profound ignorance as to their value that wealthy men and venturesome men enter into the political arena, first, for the purpose of corrupting the election of every town and city of any size in the country that they may elect city governments which will be mere tools at their command, and, next, for the purpose of corrupting the officers of the city governments themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Colorado think that applies to the District of Columbia?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the District of Columbia, from the nature of its government, is necessarily an exception; but I am justified in saying that, in view of the small returns that are being received by the people of the District of Columbia from these great franchises, the committee which has in charge the welfare of the District of Columbia has not the amount of information upon the subject—at least, so it seems to me—that they might have in order to do justice to the people of the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States, who own the streets and, therefore, own the franchises.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the Committee on the District of Columbia is a reasonably diligent committee, doing work which is not very much appreciated at home, and trying to be just as between the corporations and the people of the District. The Senator, perhaps, has not stopped to think that in these other cities, between which and Washington comparisons have been made, they have the overhead trolley system, which costs less than one-half the service which we have compelled these corporations to install in the city of Washington. The Senator perhaps has not stopped to reflect that one corporation in this city expended $400,000 for experiments on storage batteries. Perhaps he has not stopped to reflect that the companies installed a cable system, and, at the dictation of the Committee on the District of Columbia and of Congress, took that out and put in an underground system after the Budapest pattern. Possibly the Senator has not stopped to reflect, when he pays his 5-cent fare in his own city or in San Francisco, or in New York, or in Boston, or in Baltimore, that there is a great difference between a straight 5-cent fare and six tickets for 25 cents. Will the Senator venture to suggest how much he thinks is saved to the citizens of the District of Columbia annually in fare by getting six tickets for 25 cents, as between that and a straight 5-cent fare?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator is——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Colorado the question whether he would venture to suggest the amount thus saved to the citizens of the District of Columbia?

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not a lightning calculator, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ah! I will tell the Senator. It is $556,000 a year.

Mr. PATTERSON. And may I give the Senator from New Hampshire a piece of information?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. I like to be informed.

Mr. PATTERSON. And that is to be obtained by examining the late report issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor—namely, that the cost per fare in Great Britain over municipal-owned street railways is 1.1 cents.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why does not the Senator get that in Denver, his home city? Why does he not even get six tickets for 25 cents there?

Mr. PATTERSON. The reason we do not get it in Denver, and the reason we do not get it in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, and other of the cities of the country, is because these utility corporations have corrupted every avenue to the ballot box. By reason of the tremendous value of these franchises they find it profitable to use large portions of the receipts from these street railway companies to control the executive committees of political parties in the cities and to expend large sums of money for the pollution of the ballot box, and the expenditure of large sums of money in the purchase and ownership of city councils, mayors, and other executive officers of the municipalities. That is the reason, Mr. President, that we can not have these public utilities, whether it be water, where the water is owned by a private corporation, or gas, or electric lights, where these plants are owned by private corporations, or street railway fares, where the railways are owned by private corporations, as cheaply as the people are entitled to have these utilities. It is for the reason that they own the franchises, and it is only by disposing of the franchises to private corporations that these corporations have any authority whatever in the streets and avenues of the cities.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator on what theory it is that he proposes to tax these street railways 12 per cent on their net income? What is the theory on which it is done as between them and other people?

Mr. PATTERSON. The theory upon which it is done, Mr. President, is very plain and simple. These municipal corporations now are in possession of franchises, for which they have paid not a dollar, that belong to the city or the District of Columbia, that are worth to-day over $31,000,000. That is the reason. If the stock that is owned, Mr. President, had originally been procured by the first holders by purchase upon the market, they paying its value, then the stock would represent an investment, and that investment should not be discriminated against in any way, shape, or manner.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to add to what the Senator has said in reply to the question propounded by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], that if this 12 per cent net-earnings taxation plan should be adopted these companies would not then pay as much as the private citizen pays to-day in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I will assert that they would pay three times as much.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Well, Mr. President, that is simply such an exaggeration of the facts that I will not respond to it at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right, but it is a fact just the same.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator from Colorado to state that the value of the property of these corporations is $31,000,000. Does that represent the total bonded indebtedness and the stock of the companies?

Mr. PATTERSON. No. Their bonded indebtedness is about $18,000,000; and upon that bonded indebtedness, I understand, 5 per cent is paid. In addition to the bonded indebtedness, there is stock amounting to $31,000,000, and upon that $31,000,000 dividends are paid.

Mr. CULBERSON. Well, the total, then, of the bonded indebtedness and the stock is about $49,000,000?

Mr. PATTERSON. In the neighborhood of $50,000,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator what is the total valuation for the purposes of taxation of the property of these companies as given in by themselves, if the Senator can tell me, as against the $49,000,000 upon which they are bonded?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the total taxation paid by these street railway companies, as I understand, is 4 per cent upon their gross receipts. That has no relation whatever to the value of their property. Then, upon the real estate, pure and simple, owned by these corporations—and that real estate is a mere fraction of the total value of their assests——

Mr. CULBERSON. The information I desire from the Senator from Colorado is this: The total stock and bonded indebtedness of the companies amounts, as I understand, to $49,000,000, upon which they earn dividends. What I want to get at is the total value of the property of these companies as given in by themselves for the purposes of taxation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. PATTERSON. The total assessed value, as I understand it, is something over $3,000,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Senator will allow me, I have the information here.

Mr. PATTERSON. I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the report which I made to the Senate yesterday, on page 7, will be found this statement:

> Perhaps the most equitable basis of assessment is the value of a corporation's interest and dividend paying securities. The sworn statements of the street-railway and electric-lighting companies of the District show that the securities upon which interest and dividends are being paid regularly aggregate $49,444,000.
> Last year they paid $2,067,200 in dividends and interest.
> So that if we apply to them the rule that prevails here of levying a tax upon two-thirds of the value of the property, these corporations under a 1½ per cent levy would pay approximately $500,000 a year. Should this bill become a law they would pay $385,000, which is $115,000 less than under the private individual rate.

That is, under existing law. I submit these facts to the Senate and ask careful consideration of them by the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. I can further answer the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] by stating that the total property—and if I am wrong, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will correct me—the total property outside the gross receipts upon which the District of Columbia corporations pay taxes is of the value of $3,702,422.57.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that real estate?

Mr. PATTERSON. Real estate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether these corporations pay taxes upon anything else than their real estate?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the Committee on the District of Columbia, under the lead of the late Senator McMillan, who was a reasonably fair man, took this whole question up, and they thought it was the better way to compel these corporations to pay on their real estate, and then to pay a percentage on their gross receipts. That is the system. If the Senator wishes to be at war with that, that is one thing; but that is the system, and it was reached after very careful consideration and argument.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me further——

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I do not at all contend that the tax is as large as it ought to be on any of these corporations; but let a bill be presented covering that point—and I am inclined to think it ought to originate in the House of Representatives; I just throw that out incidentally, however—let a bill be presented dealing with this question, and I think the Senator and I perhaps will be nearer together than we are to-day. But I am surprised that the Senator should think it wise legislation, when dealing with the question of accommodating the traveling public and getting these street railway lines extended to the Union Station, to involve all these corporations in this controversy.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not at war with the method of taxation suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. On the contrary, I am in hearty accord with it. I think the true way upon which these utility corporations should pay the value of their property plus taxation is by a percentage of their gross receipts.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. PETTUS. What has been for the last year the gross receipts of the street railways of Washington?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Does the Senator ask for the amount of the gross receipts?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Last year they were $3,711,745.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, if I may trespass upon the good nature of the Senator from Colorado a moment, I want to correct one other misapprehension. Dividends are paid on $20,000,000, not on $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, as has been asserted. They are paid on the stock of the Capital Traction Company and the preferred stock of the Washington Railway and Electric Company. No dividends have ever been paid on the common stock of the latter company. Much of their stock was bought at par, and is now selling at less than 50 per cent on the dollar; and they are not paying running expenses. I want the Senator to keep that in mind. It is easy to get wrong on this question.

Mr. PATTERSON. There are only two street railway companies of any moment in the District of Columbia, and they are the Capital Traction Company and the Washington Railway and Electric Company.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Washington Railway and Electric Company does not pay any dividends on its common stock, and never has.

Mr. PATTERSON. They have gross receipts amounting to $1,206,143. But what I was going to suggest in connection with the question propounded by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is this: That with between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 of securities upon which interest and dividents are paid, so far as the tangible property of the corporations goes, they are taxed upon but $3,702,000, and that the only other tax they pay is the tax, in the case of the street railway companies, of 4 per cent of their gross receipts, and, in the case of the gas company, if I am not misinformed, 5 per cent of their gross receipts.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Five per cent on their gross receipts?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; on their gross receipts.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In that connection, Mr. President, let me say——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If a 12 per cent tax were to be levied on the net earnings of these companies, those companies to which my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has referred as being nonpaying institutions, having no net earnings, would not be obliged to pay another farthing of taxes in excess of what they pay now under the law providing a tax of 4 per cent on gross earnings.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very true; but the Senator knows that they are practically consolidated, and 12 per cent would be levied on the company.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But the net earnings do not come directly from the related companies; they would come from the Washington Railway and Electric Company, which is really earning a very handsome profit, and which has large net earnings.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator probably knows that the 4 per cent bonds of that company are selling at from 88 to 89 now, and, as I said a moment ago, they have never paid a dollar on their common stock in dividends.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But they pay 5 per cent on their preferred stock.

Mr. PATTERSON. For the purpose of showing that the proposed tax is entirely within reason, I might call the attention of the Senate to the neighboring city of Baltimore. It is stated in the report of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] that the street railway company of that city pays 20 per cent of its gross receipts. The Senator is mistaken. Originally it was required to pay 20 per cent of its gross receipts, but the power of the street railway corporations was such, as I understand, that gradually they induced the city council of Baltimore to lessen the amount of the gross receipts that they were required to pay, until they now pay 9 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is correct; and the Senator ought likewise to couple with the fact that they have an overhead trolley, which costs a little more than one-third of the underground system, and that they charge a straight 5-cent fare.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I have heard that now about the underground trolley for the second time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not understand that it costs any more to maintain an underground trolley than it does an overhead trolley.

Mr. GALLINGER. Infinitely more.

Mr. PATTERSON. It costs more at the original installation. But, Mr. President, whether it is underground or overhead, it is stated here as the testimony of the officers of these corporations that the street railway systems of Washington, if the tracks were obliterated and the streets without an excavation, could be replaced to-day for a little more than $17,000,000; so that I do not care whether you have the underground system of trolley or the overhead system of trolley, it is the cost of construction after all, and if $17,000,000 will replace the present street railway system of Washington, then we know that, with $18,000,000 of bonded indebtedness, those who constructed the systems have obtained more money from the franchises and by their possession of the franchises than the entire system is worth, minus the franchises.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator has stated correctly, or approximately so, what it would cost to duplicate these roads, but has the Senator looked into the actual cost to the present owners and bondholders and stockholders of these roads as they stand to-day?

Mr. PATTERSON. No, I have not, Mr. President; and it is not necessary that I should. The purchasers of these securities got possession of them with their eyes open; they knew their origin and their source, and they also knew that it is within the power of Congress, if Congress sees fit to exercise the power, to repeal the acts immediately which confer the right of franchise upon them; therefore that matter can make little or no difference.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a decision of the Supreme Court on the point raised by the Senator from New Hampshire. In the case of Smythe v. Ames the court in its syllabus—I will not read all the syllabus, but just a paragraph of it—say:

> If a railroad has bonded its property for an amount that exceeds its fair value or if its capitalization is largely fictitious, it may not impose upon the public the burden of such increased rates as may be required for the purpose of realizing profits upon such excessive valuation or fictitious capitalization, and the apparent value of the property and franchises used by the corporation, as represented by its stocks, bonds, and obligations, is not alone to be considered when determining the rates that may be reasonably charged.

That is the opinion of the Supreme Court on that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has no pertinency whatever to anything I have said.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the immense value of this class of property may be determined by the investigations that were made by the United States Government in Great Britain. If the District of Columbia were operating the street railways for the benefit of the people, since it would not be required to pay dividends on franchises, by anything like an economical administration they could furnish transportation to the city travelers with a handsome profit at 2 cents a fare. If it requires 5 cents a fare to enable these companies to pay dividends upon their stock and interest upon their bonds, that simply shows how great is the value of that part of the property that really belongs to the District of Columbia under the control of Congress, and for which originally not one cent was paid.

As I stated a moment ago, there are, I think, 172 tramway systems—either 172 or 127—owned by the towns and cities of Great Britain. Those tramways carried several billion passengers in 1904, and the average cost to the city traveler upon those British street railways was but one and one-tenth of 1 cent each.

In the city of Glasgow, Mr. President, the street railways are owned and operated by the municipality, and three-fourths of those who travel on the Glasgow street railways pay but 1-cent fares—a half-penny in English money. They have the street railways divided off into what is called "2-mile sections," and for riding 2 miles in the city of Glasgow the traveler pays but 1 cent.

In the city of Sydney, in New South Wales, they pay a penny, or 2 cents. In some of the Canadian cities the same low rate of transportation exists, and in nearly every city, whether British or German or French, where there is city ownership of street railways, the fare for a 2-mile trip is rarely or ever more than 2 cents. The section system is adopted upon the theory that the man who travels a short distance should not pay for the ride of the man who travels a long distance. Dividing the tracks into 2-mile sections, one riding within that section pays a cent or 2 cents, as the case may be, and when riding upon an additional section will pay 3 or 4 cents, and the maximum cost, as a rule, is 6 cents for riding the longest distance, with unlimited transfers.

As a matter of course, Mr. President, I have no hope that Congress is going to assume the ownership of the street railways of the District of Columbia, although that is the first great reform in dealing with this District that Congress should undertake. It should, without any hesitation, pay to the street railway companies and the gas companies a fair valuation of their property, remove from the dividend-bearing burden that is placed upon the people the value of the franchises, and, after operating them in the most economical manner, give to the people—those who use the light and those who travel upon the street railways and the taxpayers of the District of Columbia—the full benefit of such a change.

The minister from that desk this morning spoke about Washington being a city upon a hill and that its light should so shine as to be seen from all parts of the civilized world. It is a pertinent and happy suggestion, and, sitting upon a hill, as it does, the aim of Congress should be in the management of all of the affairs of this great city to so act as to set an example to the cities of the rest of the country as to what may be accomplished through government ownership and operation of the street railways and the other utility franchises in the matter of economy, as well as in honesty and in the cheapness to the inhabitant of that which was produced.

Mr. President, this is a very large subject. It is one that should not be confined within the limits of a committee; it is one that should be discussed upon the floor of the Senate, in the face of the country, so that the very fullest and most intelligent investigation may be given to it, and that the country may learn what is to be learned by the intelligent discussion and presentation of these matters. I assert that, after reading the report made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], it is perfectly evident that all the information that is necessary for intelligent action upon the part of this body has been secured by the Senator from North Dakota and the subcommittee of which he is the chairman, and it has been spread before this body in a most intelligent way. And now is the time, Mr. President.

These railways are directed to make new extensions. I suppose they desire to make those new extensions. They are to have the benefit, in the way of a franchise, to the new monumental depot that will cost the Government $6,000,000, and it is in connection with the extension of their lines that the question of compensation should be determined. There is no better time and there can be no better time than this to determine that, and I fully agree with the Senator from North Dakota in resisting the return of the bill to the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, it occurs to me that this debate is entirely out of order, and for the life of me I can not see what connection it has with the question now before the Senate, which is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the committee, to recommit the bill to the committee. I can not see any proper connection between that motion and the discussion of the question the Senator from Colorado has gone into, namely, the government ownership of railroads and general public utilities.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the amount and the polity and the significance of the information secured by the committee having this in charge are not pertinent to the question to recommit?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will possess his soul in patience, he will be answered in the five minutes I propose to take. What I am objecting to is this discussion. It is not in order on the question to recommit. The question of government ownership of utilities will have its day in court, but not while such a motion is pending for determination. If there was any argument needed to conclude in favor of the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, I am sure the Senator from Colorado has furnished it.

I understand, Mr. President, that the only purpose that a deliberative body has in the organization of a committee is to constitute an agency through which to prosecute inquiries and to obtain information for the guidance of that deliberative body in the transaction of its business. I chance to be a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that alone induces me to enter this word of protest. I am not prepared to answer the question as to whether these corporations are sufficiently taxed. I do not know. I think it altogether probable that they are not. But what I want to warn the Senate about is that in determining that question it shall not be guided by the report that has come to it on yesterday by the Senator from North Dakota from the Committee on the District of Columbia, because I tell the Senate now what every other member of that committee in common candor is bound to tell it, that the committee is not in a condition to give it any information on the subject of corporation taxes. I am not speaking of the subcommittee of which the Senator from North Dakota is chairman. I am speaking for the rest of the Committee on the District of Columbia. As the chairman has told you, no hearings were had, no notice was given, no testimony was taken, no information was gathered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said by the Committee on the District of Columbia, exclusive of the subcommittee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator will recall, if he will pardon me for interrupting him, that this question was brought before the committee in somewhat of a hurry; there was a good deal of haste about it, and a vote was taken without anyone suggesting that there should be a hearing. I am perfectly willing there should be a hearing; in fact, I should be very glad to examine the managers of these corporations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I take it the Senator will not oppose the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think that a rehearing is necessary in view of what we have already obtained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. What the Senator from North Dakota has stated in no wise affects any remarks I am submitting here. I state facts—that a committee is an agency of the body to which it belongs with but one mission, and that is to gather information so as to throw light upon the subject under discussion by the body. The report made here yesterday for all such purposes, excluding the subcommittee, is absolutely valueless to the Senate. I undertake to say there is not a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, except he be a member of the subcommittee, who will not cheerfully admit that he has derived no information to give to the Senate upon this subject of taxation; that he does not know one whit more about it than any Senator who sits around me who does not belong to the committee.

The Committee on the District of Columbia never contemplated making any inquiry into this subject. The parties to be affected were never notified that such an inquiry was being prosecuted, and so far as we of the committee, other than the subcommittee, are concerned, we must in common candor tell the Senate we have no information on the subject to give the Senate and no advice to offer.

The chairman of the committee has told the Senate that for four months that bill, or those two bills, which proposed to do nothing except to accommodate the traveling public by giving the roads the permission and requiring them to carry their tracks into the Union Depot, so that the hundreds of thousands of people traveling through the capital city should not be dumped down out here on the boundary, without any chance to get to the city, slept, so far as the Committee on the District of Columbia was concerned and so far as the Senate and the country are concerned. They slept for four months and a half, and were reported to the committee at its last meeting and brought into the Chamber here by a report from the Senator from North Dakota on yesterday.

I submit that so far as this committee is concerned, so far as the question presented here by this extraneous discussion is concerned, the Senate had as well abolish the committee as to act upon a report thus presented, with the facts thus stated. I repeat that it may be that the rate of taxation upon these corporations is indefensibly low. About that I do not know, and neither do you. You have not investigated it. Neither have I. Neither has any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, unless it be the subcommittee. Nor did the Senate have notice that that question was being inquired into by anybody. Nor did the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia or any member of that committee have such notice.

There is but one question pending here. It is not a question of government ownership of municipal privileges. It is not a question of the equitable or inequitable taxation of corporate property within the limits of the District. Those questions are not present except as they are lugged in here by the ears for the purpose of debate. The only question pending before the Senate is under this state of facts: Is the Senate prepared to relieve the committee from any responsibility in the way of inquiry, investigation, or information upon these questions and go into the settlement of these issues? The Senator from North Dakota has told you, the Senator from Colorado has told you, of the magnitude of the questions involved in this discussion. Is the Senate ready to proceed to a settlement of those issues without any light or any information from the committee charged with the responsibility of furnishing it? That is the only question. It may be that we will all be of one opinion, that the rate of taxation should be raised upon these corporations; but either abolish the Committee on the District of Columbia or give it a chance to glean some information and speak advisedly to the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood the Senator from New Hampshire—I rather think I did, perhaps—in saying there were three members who voted for this report who changed their minds. The Senator from West Virginia has spoken and the Senator from North Dakota has spoken, and the vote stood five to three.

Mr. GALLINGER. Five to four.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well; five to four. I do not wish to be put under the imputation of being one of the three who changed their minds, as I voted to bring this measure into the Senate. I was on the subcommittee a year or more ago, and investigated somewhat the street railway lines, and was informed by them that they were sorry that they allowed Congress to pass certain legislation; that if they had known it would be so much against their interests, they would not have allowed it to pass. I got a good deal of information from those gentlemen during that hearing.

Now, in the first place they wanted a monopoly of the lines around the proposed depot, and they wanted it quick. They wanted it now; they wanted it a year and a half before there was any necessity for using it. I think they have modified that somewhat, and graciously concede that some other line may come in and get up to the proposed new depot. The information which has been gotten together with great care is ample, and I do not know what is going to become of this. But I desire to say that for one I shall not vote, and I hope the Senate will not vote, to let pass precisely what they want and not pass legislation which we think is in the interest of the District of Columbia. This bill provides as a substitute for all else in regard to taxation that they can elect to pay such taxes and only so much as the man who happens to own a house and lot, which seems to be pretty fair; and I hope, no matter what becomes of this, that it will not end in adding to the monopolies we have already granted to these lines. I shall not vote to refer this bill back to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, the Congress some years ago established a theory on which these corporations were to be managed, and we ought all to recollect that this is not an ordinary question such as occurs in the States. Congress undertook to build a city here such as ought to be the capital of this nation. They granted a charter. We are told now it belongs to the people of the District of Columbia. I do not understand it in that way. But whatever it may be, they have a charter, and it is about the best that I know of in the United States. It is a city railroad corporation with a master, and that master is this Congress. The plain purpose of the acts which have been passed heretofore has been that we would have a corporation here that would have a vast income, and that Congress would tell them how they should spend it; not that we would tax them to death. The proposition was that the Congress should point out to these railroads what they should do; where they should spend their money, and in what manner they should spend it, for the benefit of the city.

It seems to me a bad idea to change that policy, which you have followed here so long and so successfully. I believe that the street railway corporations ought to be taxed in an ordinary way like other people are taxed, and they ought to pay the full amount of that tax, but I do not see the wisdom of changing a plan on which you have acted so long.

I heard this morning of a bill requiring one of these railroads to make an extension. You order how far they shall build their extensions, and how far they shall go, and you tell them when and what income they shall have for the service. You yourself make all these orders. You are managing these roads by giving positive orders, and orders without which they can not act.

Mr. President, I hope the Congress will not change this wise plan on which it has been acting. As I said before, it is not the case of a railroad that can manage its own affairs, that can do what it pleases with its property, build a road here or there. They can not build a foot of road without your orders or your consent, and it almost always comes in the form of an order, according to my observation. The Congress orders these railroads what to do, and I want them to have and to own a large income, which the Congress will tell them how they shall use for the purpose of improving the city. I hope the Senate will not change the theory on which we have acted so long.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee to which this matter was referred, it was my duty to investigate the questions involved here and to be prepared to explain the proposition to the Senate. I desire to say that I have not discharged that duty, nor do I think any member of the District Committee has discharged that duty, except two or three members of the subcommittee. I have not discharged the duty because so many other duties devolved on me that it was impossible for me to do so, and I want this matter to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, in order that the members of that committee may discharge the duties imposed upon them. I want the committee to consider these propositions. They are important propositions. I do not think the committee has considered them. I do not think thirty minutes was devoted to the whole matter, and I respectfully submit that it is hardly wise and expedient that the entire system of taxation, so far as it relates to public-utility corporations in the District of Columbia, shall be changed when the committee in charge of the matter has not devoted thirty minutes' consideration to the question.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. As I understand the question, it is presented in this way: Here is a very decided increase in the rate of taxation imposed on certain corporations in the District. This increase is suggested by a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but the Committee on the District of Columbia has not itself given the matter consideration. Further, representatives of these corporations have not been given an opportunity to state why this increase, a large increase, too, in their taxation should not be imposed. Is that so?

Mr. MARTIN. That statement is correct.

Mr. MALLORY. They have had no such opportunity.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it is proper that the work done by the subcommittee, the tables that have been prepared by the chairman of the subcommittee, should be presented to the representatives of these corporations, and that they should be permitted to respond to them—to correct them if inaccurate, to verify them if correct—or to say what they choose about them.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In response to the Senator from Colorado, as I stated this morning, the list of questions was sent to the various companies, to which answers were made. The answers were very full, very complete; and every document has been published. They can be had by Senators. So, as a matter of fact, the companies have been heard to that extent.

Mr. MALLORY. I see by the report that answers were made to the inquiries propounded by the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. On the question of taxation.

Mr. MALLORY. But the question I want to get at is, Have representatives of these corporations been given a chance to be heard? Some argument may be presented why this very large increase in taxation should not be made. I should like to know if they have had that opportunity.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me a moment?

Mr. MARTIN. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the question of increasing the taxes 12 per cent on the net earnings has never been submitted to these companies, and they have had no knowledge of it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There was an inquiry made of one of these corporations deeply interested here which was never replied to at all. It was not treated with the respect that I think the subcommittee was entitled to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is for an inquiry, and purely for information, in order to govern me in my vote.

I understood the Senator from Virginia to say that while this matter has been considered by a subcommittee the committee itself had not considered the bill. I should like to ask the Senator if it is a fact that the subcommittee reported to the Senate the bill, which had not been reported by the subcommittee to the full committee and had its full consideration?

Mr. MARTIN. The subcommittee reported the bill to the full committee. I do not know how far it is proper for me to allude to what transpired in the committee room, but what I shall say——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has already been stated——

Mr. MARTIN. But what I say is, in no sense, intended to reflect on anybody connected with the committee. As I recollect it, the bill was not read; the report was not read; it was briefly explained by the chairman of the subcommittee—very briefly. I think I am certainly within the limits of accuracy when I say that thirty minutes was not consumed altogether in the full committee on this matter.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Did not the chairman of the subcommittee make a statement some days before on the substance of the bill and report, and was there not called a special meeting of the whole committee to consider this matter?

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct; and only nine members, as I recollect, attended. I forget how many members there are on the committee. If the Senator from New Hampshire will enlighten me as to the membership of the committee, I shall be grateful to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Thirteen.

Mr. MARTIN. Of whom nine were present; and the time bestowed on this important matter, I say, did not amount to thirty minutes, when it was finally disposed of; and not half that at the meeting previously to which the Senator from West Virginia has referred.

I do not know whether these taxes ought to be imposed or not. I have not considered it. I am a member of the committee. I have not had an opportunity to consider it. I am not complaining of others who have not considered it. I have been engrossed with other matters. I have not given thirty minutes altogether to the consideration of this important bill, and I do not believe there is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia who has given thirty minutes to it, except certain members on the subcommittee; and I respectfully submit that the matter needs further investigation by the committee.

I have been approached by one of the presidents of these street car companies. He wanted to talk to me about it. I did not have time to talk to him. I am not one of those who would not talk to the president of a street railway company or anyone else having a proper interest in the matter. I think they ought to be heard, and I am willing to hear them individually and willing to hear them before the committee. But I did not have time to talk to him. I told him if he wanted to be heard he must ask a hearing before the Committee on the District of Columbia. I think he ought to have a hearing. I think he ought to have an opportunity to appear before the Committee on the District of Columbia in connection with this report which came into the Senate the other day. I think the presidents of these street railway companies and of the gas company and of the other companies ought to have an opportunity to present their views to the committee in charge of this matter. I do not see any wisdom in railroading this matter through in this manner. I state frankly that I have not investigated it. I desire the opportunity to investigate it, and I hope the Senate will send the bill back to the Committee on the District of Columbia, so that the committee may discharge its duty by giving a thorough investigation to this matter.

It may be that when it shall have been investigated I will agree as to every question involved. I do not know what my views will be. I have not had an opportunity to investigate, and I want that opportunity before I vote upon it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, is it in order to offer an amendment to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Only in the nature of instructions.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to enter upon this question and to report the result of its investigations to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the point of order that that is not in order.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from New Hampshire does not object?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object very seriously to the Senator from Colorado, who has recently been fighting in his own State for municipal ownership, and without success, instructing the Committee on the District of Columbia what its duties are.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator would not for a moment consider it as my instruction. I would take him aside and privately——

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suggest that there is nothing of graver importance, so far as concerns the question of taxation in the District of Columbia and the proper management of these city utilities, that the Committee on the District of Columbia can consider; and I think it is perfectly in place, and the Senator ought not to object to it, for the Senate committee to enter upon an investigation and report the result to this body.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want a vote on this question, and I am going to take but a moment's time further. Under protest I accepted the chairmanship of the Committee on the District of Columbia several years ago, and I have mentally protested every day against continuing in that position. Over two hundred bills have come to the committee at this session. They have involved great questions of municipal administration—the establishment of a juvenile court, dealing with insanity conditions, the abatement of nuisances, the school question, the police question, the insurance question, the fire question, and all those great matters—and the committee has given its time to their consideration. The chairman has worked days and nights and Sundays incessantly, and, as I said a moment ago, that kind of work counts for very little at our homes. I am now, perforce, under circumstances that I greatly regret, engaged in the committee room of the Committee on Appropriations as chairman of the subcommittee considering the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I do not know how long it will take. It is not work that any Senator would choose.

I want to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that if there has been any lapse which he can discover in the fidelity to duty that that committee has been guilty of, it then might be well for the Senate to instruct the committee at this late day to go into an investigation that they will go into of their own volition if this matter shall go back to the committee, at least so far as questions relating to the street railroads are concerned.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President, I am not criticising the lack of fidelity of the Committee on the District of Columbia. That is something I ought not to do, because I have no knowledge of its duties, except that from the measures in this body from that committee I know they must be very onerous and very burdensome.

Mr. GALLINGER. Revising the suggestion I made a moment ago, which was made hastily, when I made a point of order against the amendment, I think the Senator's amendment is strictly in order, and I hope the question will now be put.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Colorado a consideration. I may possibly be considered as not speaking outside of the bounds when I speak of the fact that I was once a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I very fully appreciate the statement now made by the chairman of that committee as to the very onerous duties which devolve upon the committee. They are not only onerous duties, but they are extremely disagreeable duties. It is a committee which necessarily has an immense labor, and a labor which has in it a great many very disagreeable and annoying details.

The suggestion I want to make to the Senator from Colorado is this: When the Senate recommits the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia that action necessarily involves the devolving upon that committee of the duty of doing the very thing which the Senator from Colorado proposes they shall be specifically instructed to do.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, on the strength of the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will see that it would be a reflection on the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGATION BUILDING AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Mr. BACON. I report from the Committee on Foreign Relations an amendment intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations to H. R. 19264, making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Amend by inserting the following in line —, page —:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in Constantinople, at an expense not to exceed $150,000, a proper site and building, which shall be used by the legation of the United States and for the residence of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Turkey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DRYDEN introduced a bill (S. 6262) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Kircher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 6263) for the relief of Benjamin Fenton; which was read twice by its title, and with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6264) granting a pension to Cornelius Sullivan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARNER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6265) to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Fort Stevens, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6266) granting an increase of pension to Paul Baker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6267) granting an increase of pension to Dennis A. Manning; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 6268) granting a pension to Helen G. Hibbard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLAURIN, introduced a bill (S. 6269) for the relief of W. W. Warren, administrator of the estate of Jackson Warren, deceased, of Canton, Madison County, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 6270) for the relief of George H. Green and Mrs. A. M. Barker, executors of George W. Green, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 6271) for the relief of Raleigh Sherman, administrator of William P. Leaman, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 6272) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Gamble; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6273) granting an increase of pension to William J. Wells; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 6274) to remit the sentence of general court-martial against Milton Ostheim, late a private of Company H, Twelfth United States Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6275) providing for a half holiday on Saturday for mechanics, helpers, laborers, and apprentices employed in the various navy-yards and naval stations in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (S. 6276) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Church of Savannah, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULTON (for Mr. CLAPP) introduced a bill (S. 6277) granting an increase of pension to Marie J. Blaisdell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 toward the construction of a steel floating dry dock, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP CANAL CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. MORGAN. I present a letter from Hon. W. Henry Hunter, chief engineer of the Manchester Ship Canal, England, addressed to the Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE, of this body, in reply to a letter which that Senator had written to him, in which he makes a statement of his views in regard to the construction of a ship canal. We, of course, did not have the opportunity of calling him or any other foreign engineer in person before the committee. I move that this letter be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The motion was agreed to.

FEES OF COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the 3d instant, I introduced a bill (S. 6023) to amend section 21, of chapter 252, of the act approved May 28, 1896, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," which was erroneously referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to state at this time to Senators generally that it will probably be impossible to consider any further pension legislation this year relating to private pensions on bills that have not already been introduced unless it shall appear that they are special cases demanding immediate attention.

JOSEPHINE V. SPARKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17842) granting a pension to Josephine V. Sparks and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17453) for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverages or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it has been read once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was read yesterday.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that there has been some change made in reference to the time within which the bill is to go into effect. I should like to know what that change is.

The SECRETARY. The bill read "from and after three months from the passage of this act." The amendment proposes that it shall read "from and after January 1, 1907."

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator permit me a word?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17453) for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverages or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire the Senator from Rhode Island to explain the necessity for the change to which attention has been called.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator was present yesterday, he would have heard read a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with reference to the time that would be necessary to prepare the regulations and to make proper provisions for the enforcement of the act. There were two considerations which affected the committee with reference to time. The letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue explained one of them. The second consideration was the contention of the representatives of the wood-alcohol interests that they had two years' supply of material on hand, which would be absolutely worthless to them if the bill should go into effect in the immediate future. They asked that two years be given within which they could dispose of their material. The industry of producing wood alcohol will undoubtedly be very seriously, if not vitally, injured by the passage of this measure. The committee were not willing to agree to the suggestions of the wood-alcohol manufacturers, but we were inclined to think that perhaps they should have a longer time to dispose of their products or to make such other disposition of their property as they could than was provided in the bill as it passed the House.

But the main consideration which affected the committee was the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that it was absolutely necessary to take a longer time for preparation than the House allowed before the bill should go into effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have not been in Congress so very long, but I confess I have never heard before that in passing any legislation affecting the revenues of the country we ever took into consideration the fact that some persons who would be affected by the change in the law might dispose of such property as they then had on hand, or do anything else before the law should go into effect.

Now, that may help those persons, but I assume that the law is passed for the benefit of more persons and of greater interests than those simply represented by the manufacturers. I assume there is necessity for this law; that it would not be reported here at this time and immediate consideration asked unless it affected a great many people and the people desired that it be acted upon as soon as possible.

The people in my State have been clamoring for this bill. They want it to go into effect immediately. They want it to go into effect so that they can have the benefit they will derive from the bill before next winter. They want it so that they will have some benefit now. I assume that while making this law go into effect in three months may benefit these manufacturers, making it go into effect immediately would benefit interests that are a hundredfold greater than the interests of the manufacturers.

I for one can not understand why the Department can not prepare the necessary blanks within three months. It certainly seems almost inconceivable how they can make the statement that it will require a year before they can get ready to put the law into effect and secure the proper machinery.

It seems to me that it is an injustice to those for whose benefit the law is to be enacted, to provide that they shall have no benefit from the enactment this year.

I therefore ask that the amendment changing the time from three months to January 1, 1907, be disagreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in a communication addressed to the committee, which was read in the Senate yesterday, stated the reasons why additional time would be required for the preparation of regulations and for other things that were necessary to be done in connection with this legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not just at present.

In his statement before the Committee on Finance he said he had already submitted to Congress a bill which provided that this legislation should go into effect on the 1st day of January, 1907. When asked what his purpose was in fixing that time he said:

> To give us an abundance of time, Senator, to consider all of these foreign regulations and measures, and try to formulate a series of rules and regulations that would be effective to prevent fraud against the Government, and to, if possible, allow this movement to go on without being subjected to undue criticism. Of course, we will necessarily get a good deal of it.

Those were the reasons which he suggested. He went more into detail in the examination before the committee in reference to this matter.

Of course the bill as passed by the House in this case provides that all the regulations and rules with reference to this question shall be fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is a very complicated question, and will necessarily involve an examination of the methods used abroad, and not only the methods, but the substance and material which are used for denaturing purposes, and a vast variety of questions which are very important in themselves.

As to the question whether the wood-alcohol interests should be given any consideration by Congress, I will say that this industry, involving a capital, directly and indirectly, variously estimated at from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000, has grown up in this country under existing legislation. The fact that the Government placed a large tax upon what is called "ethyl alcohol"—that is, upon grain alcohol—and did not impose any tax upon wood alcohol, has developed this industry.

Now, the question whether they are entitled at all to the consideration of Congress, the Senate can decide as well as the committee. It seemed to the members of the committee that their condition—the fact that their industry has practically been wiped out of existence by this legislation—did entitle them, perhaps, to some consideration as to the time when the act shall go into effect, and that, in connection with the statement made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, led the committee to suggest the 1st of January, 1907, instead of the House provision, fixing three months after the passage of the act.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just one moment.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask a question; that is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not see that there is any moral obligation upon the part of Congress to give any particular length of time to the manufacturers of any article, that they may dispose of the property which they now have on hand before the value will be in anywise affected by legislation. If that were true, then we have given a guaranty to every industry in the United States, and have prevented ourselves, under a moral obligation, from ever reconsidering our tariff laws until we shall give sufficient time to each person to get out of the business he has got into without any injury whatever.

I note what the Senator says in reference to the time to secure proper regulations. All the letter or the testimony states is that this period would give them an abundance of time. It does not state that they can not do all that is required of them, and do it properly, within three months, but that if you would continue it until six months, then they would have abundant time to do all that ought to be done in the premises.

I sincerely think, Mr. President, that if they will go right at it, they will be able to do all that is necessary, and make the necessary rules and regulations, within three months, as well as taking the extra three months, or six months in all; and those three months, from October until January, are the months that will be the most important to all the consumers of this product.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as to whether Congress is bound to consider in changes of legislation the interests of private individuals engaged in business in this country is, of course, a question which each Senator must determine for himself. But I will say that in my experience with tariff legislation and with internal-revenue legislation, it has been the invariable practice of the committee of which I have been a member, and of Congress itself, to take into consideration the interests of the people of this country and the interests of the industries affected by changes in legislation, whenever those changes grow out of a change in tariff duties or a change in internal-revenue taxes with a view of treating everybody, so far as possible, fairly. Legislation has been changed and modified to meet existing conditions with a view of preventing, if possible, the destruction or the injury of important industries.

In two or three States, in some counties of Pennsylvania, in some places in New York, in some places in Michigan, whole communities will be practically wiped out of existence by this legislation. Of course Congress can say, as the Senator from North Dakota says, we should pay no attention to that fact; that we are under no moral obligation to do so. That is a question which every Senator must determine for himself.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator if we are not under some moral obligation to the people who are to be benefited by this enactment, whose numbers will be a thousandfold greater than this special interest?

Mr. ALDRICH. Unquestionably that is true in all legislation of this kind, in a reduction of tariff, or in an increase of tariff. The interests of the entire people, of course, or of the larger part of the people, of this country are paramount; but it is a question whether Congress, in the exercise of an equitable discretion and of a wise judgment, ought to consider the interests of a minority of the people of the United States when they can do it without any great injustice being done to anybody else.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to call has attention to the second amendment, the amendment commencing in line 4, page 2:

> Such denaturing to be done in a denaturing bonded warehouse specially designated or set aside for denaturing purposes only, and under conditions prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Has there been any change proposed in that amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; the committee suggest a modification in the fifth line.

Mr. FULTON. So I understood.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the word "done," to insert the words "upon application of any registered distillery." The committee desire to modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to read that again.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the fifth line, on the second page, after the word "done," insert the words "upon the application of any registered distillery."

Mr. FULTON. The question in my mind is this: Will not the amendment even as modified have the effect of requiring all of this denaturing to be done in one place, in one plant, in one warehouse?

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, certainly not. The purpose of the amendment is that it must be done in a denaturizing room, which may be in any distillery in the United States.

Mr. FULTON. With the modification now suggested it may have that effect.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was the purpose of the committee, and it was the purpose of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the amendment.

Mr. FLINT. It is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment, in the first instance, as reported by the committee, as I understand, was left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. ALDRICH. As to the room. It never was intended by the committee that the discretion should extend to the designation of distilleries. The intention of the committee was that in any distillery in the United States the Commissioner might designate a room within the distillery premises that could be used for denaturizing purposes and which should be used for denaturized purposes only. I think the purpose of the amendment, the necessity for it, in fact, must be apparent to all Senators, because this work can not be done or ought not to be done or attempted in any place except in a room which is used for that purpose alone.

Mr. CULLOM. So, as I understand the Senator now, any registered distillery has the right to carry on this business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Exactly; but it must be done in a room within the distillery premises.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment opens it to distilleries generally.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does more clearly what the Commissioner of Internal Revenue intended to do by the language of the amendment as it was originally drawn.

Mr. FOSTER. The owner, then, of the registered distillery designates or sets aside the place where the denaturizing must take place?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; within a room in the distillery premises.

Mr. CULLOM. Of any registered distillery?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of any registered distillery.

The committee desired to modify the bill in line 6 by striking out the word "aside" and inserting the word "apart," so as to read "set apart" instead of "set aside," which seems better to describe what the committee intended to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island modifies the committee amendment as follows:

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the word "done," insert "upon the application of any registered distillery;" and in line 6 strike out the word "aside" and insert the word "apart."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the modification is made.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, just one moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. In line 5 the word "warehouse," I suggest, should read "warehouses."

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that modification is made.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the demand for this legislation has been exceedingly active of late, but for the last twenty-five years the question has been before the Senate more or less. Some years ago Congress passed an act of this kind in connection with what was known as the "Wilson tariff bill." It was so badly drafted that when the Treasury Department came to look at it and consulted the legal department they concluded that it was impossible of execution without opening the door to such great frauds that it could not be done. No attempt was ever made to put it in operation. When that bill was presented, the committee, of which I happened to be a member, were met with two phases of the question. They were met, first, by the people who are making wood alcohol—which is a great industry in this country, especially in the Northwest and somewhat in New England—with the suggestion that they thought this legislation would be very injurious to their enterprise. A large number of those manufacturers came before the committee and were heard. We were also met, on the other hand, by the Department of the Government charged with the collection of our revenues, the Treasury Department, with the statement of the fear that any legislation we might enact would be open to fraud and that we would make a mistake, no matter what we did.

We first heard the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Yerkes, whose especial duty it is to look after these matters, and then we heard the people who are engaged in the manufacture of wood alcohol. I think the latter made a case which would justify us, instead of postponing the time within which this law shall go into effect for six months, in postponing it for one year. It may be a great hardship on the people who are expecting to use alcohol in various ways, who hope to take advantage of this bill, but the statement made by these producers of wood alcohol is that they have a large amount of supplies on hand in the shape of prepared wood that would be absolutely useless if their industry is destroyed. I am not one of those who believe that their industry will be destroyed, but many of them believe it will be. It seemed to me that a great industry that has grown up, representing many millions of dollars, was entitled to consideration when we should change a law that has been in existence for such a long time, especially if its effect was to be what they claimed, driving them out of business, and if, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] says, will destroy whole communities.

I believe, with the Senator from Rhode Island, that every tariff law that has ever been enacted in this country has kept in mind the question, How will this law affect existing commerce and trade? And that is what ought to be taken into consideration. No tariff law ought to be enacted which does not keep that in view, because, having built up these industries under existing law, we have no right to suddenly change it and wipe out an industry.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator whether any of the tariff laws which we have passed of late years have gone into effect six months or a year after their enactment?

Mr. TELLER. We have never enacted any law since I have been in public life which has accomplished what these people state that this law will accomplish, and when we have passed tariff laws we have framed such laws in some way to meet such difficulties.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply asked as a matter of information, because I was not present in Congress at the time of the passing of those laws; but I understood that all of them went into effect immediately upon their passage.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; none of them did, Mr. President. The Senator is in error about that. No tariff act has ever gone into effect immediately, and various provisions of the tariff acts of which I have knowledge—and I have had more or less knowledge of them for quite a number of years—have gone into effect at different times, in order to take care of the very character of case which is now under consideration.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is better acquainted with the tariff than anybody of whom I know, has answered the question asked by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. He has stated the case exactly as I understand it.

But I want to say a word or two about this bill. I repeat, for twenty-five years this matter has been pressed upon Congress. I remember the late Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, presented it again and again. Recently there has been a very decided interest in this class of legislation, based upon the theory that it was going to furnish a cheap power; and, for the first time in the many years I have been in the Senate, I have begun to get telegrams and letters from my State in regard to the subject. I have never during the whole controversy received a letter from Colorado urging this legislation, until within the last three months, when letters and telegrams have come to me in considerable numbers; and it is very apparent that the people have suddenly come to the conclusion that this bill is going to be of material benefit to them. It could only be of benefit to one class, and that is those who want to use power in small quantities, the class of manufacturers who use more or less alcohol for manufacturing purposes. Their manufacture includes quite a variety of articles of wearing apparel, etc., as I understand. I believe it can be used somewhat in the preparation of tobacco and in various other ways. I believe it is used also in the making of cotton goods which will resemble silk, and which are on the market. It is said a large amount of alcohol is used in that way. That, however, is not, in my opinion, where this original movement came from. I believe some of our temperance friends thought it would be a help to the temperance cause to have free alcohol. I do not know why or how. I can not quite understand it.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury came before the committee, not for the purpose of opposing the measure, but for the purpose of explaining to the committee the difficulties which would be encountered in the operation of the law and the danger that the law would be abused and a large amount of alcohol now paying duty to the Government would escape taxation. I believe everybody recognizes the fact that this bill in some measure must reduce our revenues, but to what extent nobody is able to state. That we have yet to find out.

Mr. President, I want to say here that I have been in favor of this because it seemed to me to meet a demand that the people are making, and because I believed it was possible, and so believe now, that we might so arrange it that very little fraud would be practiced under it; and that is one of the things for which the Department wants a little time to get ready, so as to prepare warehouses where this alcohol is to be denaturized. If it is to be free of tax, I think the time we have given is exceedingly short for that purpose.

Mr. President, I believe when this bill becomes a law and goes into effect those who expect to use this character of alcohol for power will be disappointed; and that is the only use it is expected to be put to in my section of the country. A great many of my people think they will be able to use it for a cheap power to lift water for irrigating purposes and for all sorts of farm use, and I presume the same is the case in other sections of the county; but I will venture to say that when this power is brought into competition with some other power alcohol can not compete with it. I do not believe that the people will find any great benefit from this bill, so far as the question of cheap power is concerned. The manufacturers may derive benefit from it—those who make hats, those who want to turn cotton into something resembling silk, and a few manufacturers of other articles. It will help them; but the farmer—and we have heard a good deal about the farmer of late in connection with this measure to the effect that he is demanding it—I think will find that there is a far cheaper power than alcohol. It may be electricity or it may be something else.

Mr. President, there has been considerable said about the Standard Oil Company being opposed to this bill. There has not been before our committee, and I have not heard anywhere else, the slightest reason to suppose that the Standard Oil Company cares whether this bill passes or does not pass. I do not believe anybody particularly cares about it. The only people who have filed a vigorous protest are the people who are making alcohol out of wood. This kind of alcohol, of course, does not enter into drinking consumption as alcohol at all, but it does enter into the manufactures of the country.

I hope this bill will be of some benefit to the manufacturers of the country. It may be that denatured alcohol may be used in a small way for lighting purposes in the farmhouse, but it is very doubtful whether it can compete with oil at the present price or even at a considerably higher price than that at which oil is now being sold. So I think the people will be very much disappointed in the application of this law to their condition. I do not think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] ought to complain if we give these manufacturers six months to accommodate themselves to the new conditions created by this proposed law.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, alcohol is used in the manufacture of ether. There are other processes for the manufacture of ether in which alcohol is not used. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island in charge of this bill what he understands the effect of the bill will be? I should like to know whether or not alcohol free of tax can, after the passage of this bill, be used in the manufacture of ether?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, under the terms of this bill the manufacturers of ether can not use alcohol free of tax. There is an express reservation that the bill shall not apply to alcohol used as a beverage or for liquid medicinal preparations. Therefore it would not apply to the manufacture of sulphuric ether. I myself think it ought to so apply. The bill which was prepared by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself some years ago was made to apply to all industrial purposes, including medicinal purposes. That bill would have applied to the manufacture of sulphuric ether.

I think it is very important in this country that sulphuric-acid ether should be much cheaper than it now is, but this bill, as now framed, does not give free alcohol to the sulphuric-ether manufacturer.

Mr. MARTIN. I should be glad to be informed, if the Senator from Rhode Island happens to know, whether that is the construction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is, undoubtedly; and the language used could have no other construction.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand the bill as the Senator does, though I would not be clear about it if it were left to the clause to which the Senator has just referred; but there is another clause in the bill, in which it is made a criminal offense to use alcohol which has been withdrawn from bond under the provisions of this proposed law for the purpose of manufacturing any beverage or liquid medicinal preparation. I do not know how alcohol is used, whether it is used as an agency in the manufacture of ether or whether it enters into it as a component part. I am not familiar with the process, and I have some little doubt about the proper construction; but I am inclined to the same view as that expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island, and accept his construction and the construction as well, which he has, as I understand, from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island permit me to ask him a question as to the amendment and its effect? As I understand it, under the committee amendment as now amended, any established distillery may designate and set aside a bonded warehouse for the purpose of denaturing alcohol. Do I understand that this bonded warehouse may be established without the permission of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the provision, it is made the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate a room on the distillery premises, to be used for denaturing purposes, upon the application of the owner of any registered distillery. There is no discretion left to the Commissioner, except as to the designation of the room—not that he may without his approval of the application itself. As I understand this bill, every registered distillery in the United States can apply to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and then it becomes the duty of the Commissioner to designate the room within the distillery premises within which the denaturing process shall be carried on.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the Commissioner refuse to designate the room upon application?

Mr. ALDRICH. He can not, according to my understanding of the bill, and that is the understanding of the Commissioner also.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island about how many companies are engaged in the manufacture of the wood alcohol which he says will be affected by this bill? I undertsand he stated there are about $40,000,000 of capital invested in the business, but I should like to know how many companies there are.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are in the neighborhood of 120 different establishments. The number varies from 120 to 140 separate establishments, in three or four different States, which are engaged in the manufacture of wood alcohol.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Is the business in any wise equally proportioned, or is the greater per cent of it owned by one corporation?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is scattered very largely in a great number of corporations. The refining of the alcohol is done largely by one company, but the production itself from the wood is done by 120 different companies.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The producing companies sell to the refining companies?

Mr. ALDRICH. They sell to the refining companies. They sell the crude product to the refining companies, and the refining companies refine about 70 per cent of the entire product.

Mr. HALE. The investigation by the committee shows that not only are these establishments not in a great trust, but in several cases, in not very large towns, three or four different establishments manufacture wood alcohol and have nothing whatever to do with each other.

Mr. MCCUMBER. What I want to get at is whether the refining company, which practically purchases most of it, is in a trust or is one single corporation.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I have stated, there is one corporation, called, I believe, the "Wood Product Company," that does a large part of the refining. It is a corporation. I do not know whether or not it would meet the Senator's characterization of a trust. It is a corporation doing a certain amount of the business of refining. They buy the crude product and refine it, but there are a number of other companies engaged in the work.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator also whether this refining company is in anywise connected with or owned by the Standard Oil Company. I suppose that appeared in the hearings.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not appear in the hearings, but I happen to know that the father of the president of this company is the man who originated the process of refining wood alcohol. The president of this company has been in the business all his life, and he owns, I think, a large part of the stock of this company himself. I am perfectly certain he is not connected with anybody else outside of his own company or with a trust of any kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. I asked those questions, Mr. President, because of the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that the Standard Oil Company did not seem to be taking any interest in this matter. I was about to ask the Senator at that time whether or not there was any necessity for the Standard Oil Company taking any interest in it; whether or not it could not in a very short time, as quickly as this proposed law went into effect, buy up all of these companies, just as it has the companies which now make up the body of that immense corporation. The probabilities are, if it considers the business is profitable enough, that it will do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I only desire to say a few words as respects this bill, and as to the time when it shall go into effect. I think the time fixed—January 1, 1907—is as early as it is wise to have this bill go into effect. In many respects it is a very important bill. It has for its foundation more than $100,000,000 of revenue that may or may not be affected by the operations of the bill.

It is necessarily a crude bill, because it seems to be essential to pass it at this session of Congress, there being a great public demand for it. It ought to have been, in my judgment, more carefully and more elaborately considered; but I believe, as it is amended by the Senate Committee on Finance, it can be put into operation effectively, and with proper checks to prevent frauds upon the revenue; but I do not believe it will accomplish all that many of its friends think it will accomplish.

As it now is before the Senate, every registered distillery is authorized to make application for the privilege of manufacturing denatured alcohol. Whilst that is a privilege, I imagine relatively very few of the distillers will avail themselves of it. Certainly a large number of the distilleries that manufacture whisky for the ordinary bonded warehouse will not go into this business. It is only those who manufacture alcohol for immediate consumption, and who pay the tax presently, that will probably avail themselves of this privilege.

I do not know what the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may be, but they certainly ought to place a limit upon the daily production of the distillery that desires to use this process. So that I have no doubt only those distilleries which produce, say, 500 gallons per day will be able to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill.

There is another thing in connection with this proposition which I think ought to be considered, and that is that the Government undertakes this business for the benefit of these manufacturers. There is an appropriation of $250,000 in the bill, which, of course, if it is generally availed of, will not be sufficient to pay the expenditures. The work of denaturing alcohol must be done in the presence and under the guidance of a storekeeper, an inspector, and a gauger, in order that frauds may be prevented. There is no provision in the bill whereby anyone shall bear those expenses, and therefore they must be paid out of the Treasury. To that extent this bill will be an expense to the Treasury of the United States. The appropriation made by the bill is $250,000, but it is probable that a much larger amount will be needed during the next year.

I consented to the passage of this bill for the reason that I believed it might be well to start it on its pathway during the next fiscal year, and that it was possible for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations that would prevent frauds on the revenue; but I do not believe that they should have for this purpose a less time than six months. It is a matter that can not be hastily done. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue must necessarily examine with care the processes that are now in vogue in Germany, in Great Britain, and in other countries of Europe, where the conditions are very different from those that prevail here. There they have more complete control over distilleries than we have in this country. Here anyone who desires can establish a distillery, and under this bill anyone who desires can start a new manufacture of alcohol.

I infer that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] believes that under this bill the people of North Dakota will see denatured alcohol distilleries spring up. I know an impression prevails in different portions of the State in which I live that there will be distilleries of denatured alcohol established, although I believe there is only one distillery in the State at this time.

When these distilleries are established, they must be provided for under the limitations and provisions of our present internal-revenue law as respects distilled spirits; otherwise the denatured spirits will in some way get into the commerce of the country without the payment of the $2.07 tax that is placed upon each gallon. So there will be a great temptation to men to secure this alcohol for general commercial purposes without the payment of the tax. A man who can secrete two gallons of alcohol per day will make more than an ordinary skilled mechanic. Therefore it is that at every step in these processes there must be a watchful eye until the denaturing process absolutely takes effect, or else there will be fraud. There is nothing short of the absolute injection of these poisonous materials, whatever they may be, into this alcohol that will prevent fraud.

So, without reference to the question of wood alcohol, I do not believe it is wise to make a date for this bill to go into operation earlier than the 1st day of January next, and I believe, from what I have heard, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue also thinks so. He prepared a bill, at the request of the House of Representatives, upon this subject, after a good deal of care, and in it he provided that it should take effect on the 1st day of January, 1907. When he was before the House Committee, they wanted the bill to take effect at an earlier date. He said, if they insisted on ninety days, the necessary regulations could be prepared in that time, under compulsion, of course; but I want the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have ample time to prepare these regulations so that they will be as nearly impervious to fraud as human ingenuity can make them. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue also presented a bill to the Committee on Finance, in which the date for the bill to take effect was fixed for the first of January next.

Therefore, while I am as anxious and my people are as anxious—I say my people; I mean the people of Iowa—that this bill should go into effect at the earliest possible day as are the people of any other State, I think the hazard to the revenue is too great for us to precipitate this at an earlier day than it is perfectly certain that the proper officers will be able to deal with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I made the motion more for the purpose of ascertaining the reasons and to get the question before the Senate, as I am not a member of the Committee on Finance. If it is the unanimous opinion of the members of the Committee on Finance that the bill should not go into effect until the 1st of January, not being a member of the committee and not being informed on the subject, I will not attempt to press my judgment against the judgment of the committee which has considered it. Therefore I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe that is the unanimous judgment of the committee. It is certainly my judgment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there is no reason why I should occupy very much of the time of the Senate, but I wish to say that as a new member of the Committee on Finance, which has considered this subject, the investigations we made, the hearings we had, did give me, to some extent, an education upon the subject. I realized from those hearings and investigations the great magnitude of this plan and scheme, the possibilities and probabilities of fraud and of alcohol not intended to be actually denatured getting on to the market by stealth and fraud, and thus escape the tax. We heard the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who I think impressed the committee as being a man of singularly clear judgment, of great capacity and integrity and fundamental knowledge, on this subject and with its operations.

When we came to consider what was perhaps the mainly debatable question, as to when the act should be put in force and effect, the committee was united in the belief that it could not be made to start as a practical, safe scheme under the time between now and January 1. The wood-alcohol men desired much more time, and showed to the committee the condition of their plants, the accumulation of stock and of wood, the underlying material, and asked for two years. But hearing them all and hearing fully the Secretary and, as I have said, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the committee believed that, considering the equities of the wood-alcohol manufacturers and the time required by the Government to put the machinery in force and the great public demand for this bill, the 1st of January was a fair and safe date to be fixed; that it would give some time to the wood-alcohol manufacturers to carry out their work and use up their accumulated supplies of materials; that it would afford time to set all the machinery at work, and would, at a near date, give the public a bill which can only be judged after it has been tried.

I agree with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the benefits are not likely to be so great as public sentiment now measures them; but that it will be important, and that great industries will be helped, stimulated, improved, and advanced among the people by this measure to a very considerable extent, I believe. We shall know, after it has been tried, two things: How much good it does in the diffusion throughout the country of denatured alcohol in the arts and in the industries of the country, and we shall know whether we have securely protected the Treasury from fraud, and shall then be prepared—I think that is the best that can be said of this bill—to consider, as one of the sections of the bill provides for, for further considering it and making it, if need be, a more perfect bill.

The bill has certainly my godspeed. I think we can do what other countries have done. There has been no attempt on the part of anybody—on the part of the Committee on Finance or the Senate—to delay, but we have held session upon session, day after day, at early and late hours, and this is the result of the deliberations of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "after," to strike out "three months from the passage of this act" and insert "January 1, 1907;" in line 11, after the word "officer," to strike out "before" and insert "after;" in line 12, before the word "warehouse," to strike out "bonded" and insert "distillery;" in the same line, after the word "with," to insert "methyl alcohol or other;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "material," to insert "or materials, or admixture of the same;" and in line 4, after the word "purposes," to insert:

Such denaturing to be done upon the application of any registered distillery in denaturing bonded warehouses specially designated or set apart for denaturing purposes only, and under conditions prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

So as to make the clause read:

That from and after January 1, 1907, domestic alcohol of such degree of proof as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may be withdrawn from bond without the payment of internal-revenue tax, for use in the arts and industries, and for fuel, light, and power, provided said alcohol shall have been mixed in the presence and under the direction of an authorized Government officer, after withdrawal from the distillery warehouse, with methyl alcohol or other denaturing material or materials, or admixture of the same, suitable to the use for which the alcohol is withdrawn, but which destroys its character as a beverage and renders it unfit for liquid medicinal purposes; such denaturing to be done upon the application of any registered distillery in denaturing bonded warehouses, specially designated or set apart for denaturing purposes only, and under conditions prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 23, after the word "That," to insert:

Any person who withdraws alcohol free of tax under the provisions of this act and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and who removes or conceals same, or is concerned in removing, depositing, or concealing same for the purpose of preventing the same from being denatured under governmental supervision, and.

In line 13, after the word "sells," to strike out "or;" in the same line, after the word "conceals," to insert "or otherwise disposes of;" and in line 16, after the word "both," to insert:

And shall, in addition, forfeit to the United States all personal property used in connection with his business, together with the buildings and lots or parcels of ground constituting the premises on which said unlawful acts are performed or permitted to be performed.

So as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. That any person who withdraws alcohol free of tax under the provisions of this act and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and who removes or conceals same, or is concerned in removing, depositing, or concealing same for the purpose of preventing the same from being denatured under governmental supervision, and any person who uses alcohol withdrawn from bond under the provisions of section 1 of this act for manufacturing any beverage or liquid medicinal preparation, or knowingly sells any beverage or liquid medicinal preparation made in whole or in part from such alcohol, or knowingly violates any of the provisions of this act, or who shall recover or attempt to recover by redistillation or by any other process or means, any alcohol rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal purposes under the provisions of this act, or who knowingly uses, sells, conceals, or otherwise disposes of alcohol so recovered or redistilled, shall on conviction of each offense be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and shall, in addition, forfeit to the United States all personal property used in connection with his business, together with the buildings and lots or parcels of ground constituting the premises on which said unlawful acts are performed or permitted to be performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 15, after the word "appropriated," to insert "said appropriation to be immediately available;" so as to read:

The sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said appropriation to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make full report to Congress at its next session of all appointments made under the provisions of this act, and the compensation paid thereunder, and of all regulations prescribed under the provisions hereof, and shall further report what, if any, additional legislation is necessary, in his opinion, to fully safeguard the revenue and to secure a proper enforcement of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18537) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the informal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Vermont to allow me to try to get up the joint resolution which I reported yesterday with reference to material for the construction of the Panama Canal, in order that it may be adopted to-day. If it shall give rise to discussion I certainly will not press it, but will await some other time for its consideration. If it can be considered without debate, I should be very glad to have it considered now.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, it can not be done without debate. I would rather it should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am very sorry it can not be considered at this time, because I think it is in the public interest that the joint resolution should be considered now.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to make some remarks on it. Is it to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. ALDRICH. It will go over until some other time. I shall not be here to-morrow, but I imagine that some other member of the committee will call it up then.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator will not call it up to-day?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not call it up to-day.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18537) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 2, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" in line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "one inspector, $2,000;" in line 17, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 18, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two thousand eight" and insert "four thousand two;" in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" in line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven thousand two" and insert "eight thousand four;" on page 3, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of Agriculture, $8,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $4,500; and the Assistant Secretary is hereby authorized to perform such duties in the conduct of the business of the Department of Agriculture as may be assigned by the Secretary of Agriculture; chief clerk, $2,500; one solicitor, $3,000; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,500; stenographer and executive clerk to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,000; stenographer to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,400; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; one appointment clerk, $2,000; one chief of supply division, $2,000; one telegraph and telephone operator, $1,400; one telegraph and telephone operator, $1,200; one inspector, $2,000; one clerk class 4, $1,800; three clerks class 3, $4,800; three clerks class 2, $4,200; seven clerks class 1, $8,400; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; one clerk, $900; one clerk, $840; six clerks, at $720 each, $4,320; one chief engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,600; one fireman, who shall be a steam fitter, $1,000; three assistant firemen, at $720 each, $2,160; one assistant fireman, $600; one carpenter, $1,000; one electrician, $1,000; one painter, $1,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, to increase the appropriation for the clerical force of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture from $84,660 to $89,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "eight hundred and forty;" in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "seven thousand six hundred;" and in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five thousand eight hundred and forty" and insert "twenty-three thousand five hundred and sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Secretary: * * * one painter, $840; eleven laborers or charwomen, at $480 each; $5,280; one charwoman, $540; five charwomen, at $240 each, $1,200; for extra laborers, emergency employments, and pay of rents, $7,600; in all, $23,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture from $110,500 to $113,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Weather Bureau," on page 5, line 21, after the word "one," to strike out "battery man" and insert "electrician;" and in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred and forty" and insert "one thousand;" so as to read:

One engineer, $1,200; one captain of the watch, $1,000; one electrician, $1,000; six skilled artisans, at $840 each, $5,040, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for salaries in the office of the Chief of the Weather Bureau from $194,530 to $194,690.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 25, after the word "books," to insert "necessary scientific and other publications;" so as to read:

Contingent expenses, Weather Bureau: Stationery and blank books; necessary scientific and other publications; furniture and repairs to same; freight and express charges, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 7, before the word "stationery," to insert "scientific and other publications;" in line 14, before the word "telegraph," to strike out "seacoast" and insert "Weather Bureau;" so as to read:

General expenses, Weather Bureau: Every expenditure requisite for and incident to the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of meteorological observation stations in the United States, * * * including the purchase of scientific and other publications, stationery, furniture, instruments, storm-warning towers, and all other necessary supplies and materials.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 19, after the word "months," to insert:

And who may be employees of other Departments of the Government, and the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1885, providing that no part of the money appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person as additional salary or compensation shall not apply to said employees.

So as to read:

Including pay of special observers and display men, none of whom shall receive more than $25 per month, and who may be employees of other Departments of the Government, and the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1885, providing that no part of the money appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person as additional salary or compensation shall not apply to said employees.

Mr. HALE. I do not quite get the force of what is intended to be effected by this amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. As the Senator will observe, the preceding clause reads:

Including pay of special observers and display men, none of whom shall receive more than $25 per month and who may be employees of other Departments of the Government.

It is proposed that the Weather Bureau may employ the life-saving men and men who are in Government employ at a much less cost than would be involved if the bureau sent an employee at the full charge of the Bureau. It is a money——

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that the conditions are such here that this mingling of the two services and paying extra for men who are taken from one service and put into another may be justified. But it certainly is not a thing which we ever do or that I have ever known to be done. We have all the different Departments and bureaus of the Government with fixed salaries, and the salaries are made upon the theory that the employees who receive the salaries give their time to the Government. We adjust their salaries not upon the basis or the suggestion that they are to receive any money from any other Department of the Government, and if this is looked upon or accepted as a precedent it will work great mischief.

Senators can see in a moment that the proposition that one Department of the Government may take employees, and salaried employees, from another Department of the Government and pay them additional salaries or sums of money is one that will work evil. It will be contrary to our whole system, and it ought to be contrary to our whole system. It confuses the service and it makes a precedent, and I am afraid will be the occasion for subsequent requests and demands of this kind.

We are trying with respect to our appropriations more and more every year, both in the House and in the Senate, to keep every Department distinct from every other Department. We have provided within the last few years that all general lump sums out of which clerks and employees are paid shall be estimated for and considered by Congress in detail and that the salaries shall be in full for compensation for the office or for the employment indicated and provided for. I am almost inclined to make the point of order. Of course, there is a general law that there shall be no extra salaries paid. But I will not make the point of order until I get some further explanation of the great need and great emergency that requires this abnormal provision.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Maine is entirely right as to the general proposition, but it appeared to the committee that in the peculiar weather service there were many places along the coast where this provision would be valuable. This statement was made: They could frequently get the observations the Chief of the Weather Bureau required and the reports by paying $10 a month to some official of the Government, whereas if he sent a man especially for that purpose he would have to pay him $75 a month. It was for the sake of getting the most service possible at the smallest compensation. These men could not be required, of course, to do this service unless they were willing to enter it. They are appointed for a special duty in some of the Departments. If there were a law requiring them to do it, it would be very well.

I care nothing about this amendment, and if the Senator makes the point of order it will surely lie. The committee reported it because they thought it would give more service at a very much less cost. It is an unusual provision, and I should not wish to see it extended.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the reason the Senator from Vermont gives is sufficient.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. It was especially pressed upon your committee, in considering this matter, that there were a number of life-saving stations and light-house stations on the coast of Washington and the coast of Oregon especially, where the Department could receive no other reports than those that came from this source or from this avenue, from those who were stationed there in charge of the stations.

Mr. HALE. I would have no objection to a provision that should direct the life-saving force, when it is practicable and does not interfere with its duties, to communicate to the Weather Bureau such information as it has secured or is able to get. But the reason given by the Senator from Vermont, I think, is so inadequate that I am constrained to make the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. Before the point of order is finally decided, I would suggest an amendment that I think will overcome the objection. If you will limit it to those employed in the Life-Saving Service and to light-house keepers along the coasts, there will be no harm in it.

Mr. HALE. My objection is not to its scope, but it is to taking employees from one branch of the service and using them in another branch and paying them an extra salary—two salaries.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say further to the Senator from Maine that I had occasion to examine a while ago the pay and duties of the life-saving men along the coasts. Their pay is very small. They are required to patrol the coast from one end to the other along their beats. I think no class in the service gets less pay than they do. If you allow those men to perform this additional duty and give them not to exceed $25 a month, they will still get less than a hundred dollars in all.

Mr. HALE. The way to do that is in the proper appropriation bill to give these men suitable salaries. The very fact that the amendment carries with it the idea that they have time in their service to do this extra outside work, which would increase their pay $25 a month, does not indicate that they are so overbusy and need advanced salaries. But I am not committing myself to that proposition. Whenever that does come up in any proper appropriation bill we can regulate their salaries, but let us keep the different departments of the Government separate and apart.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 9, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Weather Bureau from $1,439,080 to $1,439,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 10, line 4, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three thousand six" and insert "five thousand four;" so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One Chief of Bureau, $4,500; one chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class 4, $5,400, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 4, to increase the total of the appropriations for salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry, from $82,980 to $84,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items of appropriations for general expenses, Bureau of Animal Industries, on page 12, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred and twenty-five;" so as to read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, waive the requirement of a certificate with beef and other products which are exported to countries that do not require such inspection, $1,625,000, etc.

Mr. LONG. I wish the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment. I move to strike out "twenty-five thousand" and insert "seventy-seven thousand two hundred," so as to read "one million six hundred and seventy-seven thousand two hundred dollars." That is the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture, who stated that amount was necessary to make the inspections required.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is very true that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas just brings the appropriation to the estimate which was made by the Secretary. It is also true that the Secretary, in his statement before the committee, said that of all things in the bill this is the most important, as he deemed, to successful administration.

The committee at first agreed to the full amount of the estimate which is asked for by the Senator from Kansas. Later, in an executive meeting, the desire to economize and to reduce the appropriation, just as far as possible induced the committee to deduct $50,000.

I think myself that the Secretary should have the full amount of his estimate. He has had to have within a year emergency appropriations, and the present state of excitement in reference to the stock business throws more work upon this Bureau of the Department. It is for the Senate to judge whether the desire for economy shall prevail over these considerations.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator if the committee had any reason to suppose that the Secretary's estimate was too large?

Mr. PROCTOR. No; we did not. We thought it was probably reasonable, but the Senator knows very well that we have to guess sometimes what may be really needed. We hoped that he might get along with a less amount and thus save increasing the appropriations carried by the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Then really it was cut down without any judgment or sense on the part of the committee?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not want to confess to an entire lack of sense, but every committee in making appropriations, I believe, reduces amounts sometimes when they would be glad to give the greater sum if they could do so consistently.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am gratified to hear the chairman of the committee express himself in favor of appropriating the amount of the estimate in this case. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the emergency nature of the work for which this appropriation is made. It goes to the very vitals of our export trade in meats. It has to do with the suppression or control of contagious diseases and likewise the establishment and maintenance of quarantine districts.

It does seem that with that character of work the Secretary should be provided with ample means to take care of every contingency that could or would likely arise. Instead of being confined to the mere profitable expenditures, it appears that good administration requires that a reasonable margin should be allowed for exigencies which are quite likely to arise in connection with any one of the three phases of animal industry with which this appropriation has to do.

Since no special reason has been or probably can be given for the reduction of the estimate, save simply a desire to curtail appropriations, I believe that the appropriations can be curtailed in almost any other part of the bill with less liability to cripple a necessary part of the service than can such reduction be made in this particular item.

For instance, the appropriation becomes exhausted with reference to the item of the inspection of meats for export. It can readily be perceived that the lack of funds for the proper administration of the law in that behalf would necessarily cripple our export trade. Again, in the case of contagious diseases an exigency is likely to arise at any time, and the condition of the Department, reduced to inefficiency because of the lack of funds, would be simply deplorable.

Finally, with reference to the establishment and maintenance of quarantine districts, it will be admitted without hesitation, I assume, that Congress would not for a moment think of economizing in the matter of preventing the spread of contagious disease amongst the domestic animals of the country. The loss which might be incurred by crippling the service in this particular respect is so great that it seems to me the item should be made at least to correspond with the estimate. The difference between the estimate and the amount stated here is but small. I think the estimate was $1,677,200. The appropriation is for the sum of $1,625,000. The difference is less than $50,000. I think Congress would act wisely in allowing the Department the sum specified in the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Change the total, on page 12, line 12, from $1,625,000 to $1,677,200.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 14, line 11.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate is apprised of all changes that are made by the committee, because they appear in italics; but the Senate is not apprised of the changes in the law and of the new features of the bill, because they appear in the same text with the rest of the bill. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to page 13, beginning at the middle of line 12, and ask him whether the provision I shall read is the present law:

And the employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry outside of the city of Washington may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is the present law.

Mr. HALE. How long has it been?

Mr. PROCTOR. I am not able to state, but I think for some time.

Mr. HALE. I was looking over the corresponding provision in last year's bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say to the Senator that the following lines are new this year:

which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year.

That was added in the House. No change was made by the committee of the Senate. It was stated that other Departments had a similar provision.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that other Departments have provisions of this kind for clerical services outside of the city of Washington? If we are going to give leave, the pay continuing, to officials in the employment of the Government outside of Washington, every post-office employee will want his fifteen or thirty days. The practice of leave has grown up gradually, being at first only applied to certain Departments in Washington. Generally speaking, it is confined, except in special cases—I do not know how many there are—to employees here in Washington for special reasons. But if everybody outside of Washington is to have fifteen or thirty days' leave, it is a vast subject and is a depletion of the work of the Government to a very great extent.

I wish the Senator would show me in last year's bill this provision.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARTER. In line with the observations of the Senator from Maine, I desire to call attention to the fact that leave of absence for fifteen days having been granted to letter carriers in cities, it follows that a demand becomes almost irresistible to extend like leave of absence, with pay, to all rural free-delivery letter carriers, about 40,000 in number. I think that one item alone will amount during the next year to something over $1,000,000 of expense to the Government.

Mr. HALE. Well, Mr. President, that shows this feature is creeping; it is advancing, and that is one of the infirmities we are under as a legislative body. We have a favored class of officials in this country. There is no office created that there is not an importunate demand to fill it. For every office created, it is safe to say that there are dozens and scores of applicants desiring to get into the Government service. They desire to get into the Government service because they are better off than they are outside. They have regular employment; they have short hours; they are desirable places, and the moment they get in they become an organized and importunate and hungry band of mendicants, begging us for more favors.

We are beset by them constantly, and we forget all the people who have not been able to get into these offices. Committees take the cue from the importunities of the people in office and are continually granting them more and more pay. They organize, they taboo, they boycott Members and Senators who do not favor their propositions and their demands for increase, and we sit tamely and grant their requests.

There is no session of Congress that we are not importuned and our doors beaten upon by the employees here in Washington and elsewhere, demanding more pay, more privileges; and they are now organizing for a civil-service pension in some form or other, which, when inaugurated and adopted by some careless and indifferent Congress, will add tens of millions of dollars every year to our expenses.

I am rather hopeless of being able to stop or restrain or limit this. I have tried it before, and I have always been overruled. I have nothing to say against these employees personally. They are, I presume, almost all of them good and faithful servants of the public. But that does not justify them in this constant importunity upon us for more pay and more privileges. Whoever goes into one of these places at a known and fixed compensation and privileges should accept that; and the heads of Departments ought not to allow subordinates to push these matters before Congress. I think some heads of Departments have adopted rules which seek to prevent it.

I find on examination that last year this was crystallized as permanent law, and I can not make a point of order upon it; but I do make the point of order on the provision that is inserted by the committee which extends it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, does not the Senator from Maine think that there is some justice in the principle of the old-age pension for employees of the Government, who, entering under civil-service rules as young men and young women, continue in the service of the Government until they are discharged by reason of old age, and who by reason of the smallness of the compensation are prevented from accumulating anything for the time when discharge comes?

Then, again, there is one other matter I should like the illuminating views of the Senator from Maine upon. It is a recognized fact that the cost of living is constantly on the increase. I have not any question but that the cost of living, taking the same standard, has increased not less than 33 per cent within the last ten years. Under those circumstances, can you blame those who give their service to the Government from seeking to have their pay keep pace with the cost of a livelihood? I think there is a good deal to be said upon the side of those in the employment of the Government under civil-service rules who seek to keep the wage that they receive upon an equality with the cost of living.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to ask the Senator, if he sees some justice in the matter of pensioning Government employees, whether he has considered the question as to who is to pay those Government employees this extra amount of compensation? He knows something about life on a farm, I think, where men work from 5 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night. There every member of the family works, and they do not stop working when they are 62 years of age, nor when they are 70 years of age. Those are the people, who are putting in sixteen hours a day, who must pay the pension to the clerks who have had an easier time all their lives and have received on an average four times as much a day, taking year in and year out, that their lives may be made a little more easy. Does the Senator see any injustice from that side of the proposition?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I am so bitterly opposed to this matter of pensioning Government employees that I speak earnestly, but I hope to the point, to the Senator upon that proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, there is a wide difference between a man who is confined in his activities under Government employment——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me a minute?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. After receiving the appointment under the civil service, these persons are not forced to remain in the position. I can not see any reason in the world why, if we give them a civil pension, we should not give a pension to the class mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota. The Government employees desire these places, and it is impossible for me to see how the Senator from Colorado can make a distinction between that class and citizens.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, then, Mr. President, we had better abolish the system of pensions altogether.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator mentioned as entering into the merits of this question, of course, twice or thrice the fact that these men entered the employment of the Government through the civil service. What relation, in the apprehension of the Senator, does that have, if any, to the merits of a civil-service pension?

Mr. PATTERSON. There are so many questions propounded that I may not be able to answer all of them, but I will answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin first.

Under the old order a Government employee served at the longest four years. He simply took a recess, as it were, during the term of an administration from his usual and ordinary vocation of life, and he was not long enough in the Government service to be utterly spoiled for almost any other kind of employment. I think that is a good answer.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that an argument for or against the civil-service system?

Mr. PATTERSON. It may not satisfy the Senator from Wisconsin, but it seems to me that it meets the case.

Mr. SPOONER. I repeat, is it an argument for or against the civil-service system?

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, I will stand by the civil service. I believe in the civil service. I believe it is a good thing for the Government. I believe it is the worst for those who enter the service of the Government, unless there is some provision made eventually by which, when they are totally disqualified for labor by reason of old age, they should not be turned adrift as paupers upon the world. I rather admired the righteous indignation of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] in the intensity of his feelings as gathered from the earnestness of his manner and language; but the Senator from North Dakota ought to put his ax at the root of the evil. We are not going to have pensioned classes. Then we had better uproot so much of the pension tree as we have, and put everybody upon an equality. The men who receive the largest amount of pay, the men who by frugality might, by reason of the amount of their pay, save enough to keep them out of the poorhouse at the end of their term, are the very men who are pensioned. Commencing with the Supreme Court, the judges of the United States district and circuit courts, naval officers, military officers of all degrees—employees of the Government who receive the very largest salaries that the Government pays—are the men who, when their term of service has expired and when the time comes for retirement, are kept in a condition of elegant leisure until they pass away.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator recognize the distinction between the class of men who are under contract with the Government all their lives in the Army and the Navy to go to battle and risk their lives for the country—the soldiers and sailors—and the people who serve in the Departments, who are far away from danger and hardship and exposure?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I do not think that a man is under contract to stay in either the military or naval service all his life. I understand he may get out of it just whenever he pleases, and men are constantly getting out of it. They live a life of leisure and elegance, and they receive deference. They may be regarded as a kind of exclusive class; but there is in reality no substantial difference between those who are employed by the Government in any capacity and the poorest and the meanest who enter the employ of the Government and are expected to continue in the employment of the Government under civil-service rules.

Deprecate it as much as we may, Mr. President, the man who enters the Government service, as a rule, enters it as a life service. The allurements of the opportunities that are offered to the average man, the man with the average industry and enterprise, are not sufficient to withdraw him from a certainty of a livelihood that the Government offers. So I say that when either a man or a woman has been in the employment of the Government service five or six years, he or she has practically mortgaged his or her life to the Government; and the clerks who receive this very, very moderate compensation, living here at the capital, with hardly enough to pay rent for a couple of rooms, and especially if they happen to have families, are required to eke out a very scant subsistence. There is no future for them. After they have been in the employment of the Government for a few years they must continue there, and the longer they stay the more their capacity to make a living elsewhere is lessened. So they continue until, under the rule or the law, they must be retired, and then they become either a charge upon their friends, if they have friends, or, if they do not happen to have friends, so far as their ability to maintain themselves is concerned, they have simply got to crawl off to some garret and die.

Then there is a very considerable difference between a man in the Government employment and a man who is not in the Government employment. The latter has the world before him, and opportunities are constantly being offered to him, though of course but few are able to take advantage of them, for the betterment of his condition and the accumulation of a little or a great competency and the lessening of the hours of labor that the Senator from North Dakota deprecates should be imposed upon his constituents.

But, Mr. President, I only want to suggest that there is a very, very strong spice of justice with the men who claim that, where a man or a woman is expected to serve for a life in the employment of the Government at a small wage, when they are retired for want of capacity they shall be provided for in some modest way, and that men in the employment of the Government who seek by proper solicitation to have the compensation which they receive from the Government keep pace with the cost of living are not to be so severely condemned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the point of order made by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I find on examining the bill that the provision to which I objected is not an amendment proposed by the Senate committee, in which case it would be subject to a point of order, but it is in the text of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and therefore is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when the bill was taken up, and I wish to inquire if we are simply considering the amendments of the committee as they are reached in the reading of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is being read for amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Is it in order to move an amendment to the text of the bill? It would be unless there were some agreement to the contrary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] asked that the bill be first read for the consideration of committee amendments.

Mr. PROCTOR. That it should be read for committee amendments; and I should be glad if the Senator would withhold his amendment until the committee amendments are completed.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the rule, I will, of course, withhold the amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 15, line 5, after the word "lines," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase in the open market samples of all tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products, of foreign or domestic manufacture, which are sold in the United States for the detection, prevention, treatment, or cure of diseases of domestic animals, to test the same, and to publish the results of said tests in such manner as he may deem best.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not like to fill the rôle of being the only critic of this bill, but this provision is so embracing that I should like the Senator in charge of the bill to state to the Senate whether the committee fully understood its range, and what is the occasion for it. Now, let me read the pending amendment:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase in the open market samples of all tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products, of foreign or domestic manufacture, which are sold in the United States for the detection, prevention, treatment, or cure of diseases of domestic animals, to test the same, and to publish the results of said tests in such manner as he may deem best.

I do not know but that the Secretary of Agriculture, if you give him force enough, can do this; but it is not a light job. In my own small town where I live the apothecary shops are filled with medicines of different kinds for the troubles of horses, cattle, and sheep. When I go into my stable where I keep my horses, I find scores of these medicines, and every now and then I am asked to put up another shelf to accommodate more of them. Now, this amendment says that the Secretary of Agriculture shall buy "in the open market samples of all" these medicines. While, of course, there are not as many kinds of them as there are words in the dictionary, they are almost as numerous as the rocks in the fields and the trees in the forests. There is no end to the nostrums and medicines that are used for the relief, care, and cure of domestic animals. I do not know whether it is the purpose of the bill to start the Secretary out in testing all of these. If it is, I say to the Senator from Vermont, you must endow him with the funds to do this. It is not a little side issue, or what is called a "by-product of the work of the Agricultural Department," but it is a pretty large contract.

As I have said, I dislike to play the rôle of critic on this bill, because I think the committee has got a good bill, the best bill I have known to be brought from the Committee on Agriculture before the Senate. What I mean by that is that I think they have been more careful to keep from putting in new things, changes in the law; but when I read this provision I must say I was rather amazed at the extent to which this governmental supervision of everything under the sun that men, women, and children do and enjoy and wear is taken hold of by the Government, and rules as to it fixed. I should like to see it stopped somewhere. It evidently is not stopped in this bill, and I do not know that we can stop it.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I hardly think this is so large an animal as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] apprehends. This amendment does not require the purchase; it only authorizes the Secretary to purchase; and the purchase, of course, is only for a very small sample, just enough to analyze. A great deal of good has been done by the authority given to the Department to make analyses of fertilizers, and especially of these cures. Many have been put on the market that were of no value. Tests were made not very long ago, as the Secretary said when he was before the committee, of tuberculin that had been used for several years in one of the finest herds of Jerseys in the country; but by a test it was found to be good for nothing whatever.

In regard to the Ellsworth drug store, if the druggist sells cattle medicines, when he sees in the publication from the Department of Agriculture that they have been tested and found not to be good, he will be sure to get good ones and keep them. That is just what this provision proposes to do. It enlightens——

Mr. PROCTOR. Let me finish my sentence. The authority to publish enlightens the country, settles the matter, and ends any further expense.

Mr. HALE. That, of course, was the argument about paternalism. The old-fashion way was, if I bought medicine, or my men who have charge of my horses bought medicine, and it did not work well, we did not buy it again. They found out themselves, and the country has got along pretty fairly in that way. There have been a good many horses and cattle and sheep raised and grown, killed and marketed, and the Government has not taken charge of all the medicines that were administered.

Of course the reply the Senator makes is the patent reply that the Government should take hold of these things and must do all of these things. I do not know where it will stop. Pretty soon, I suppose, my family doctor will not be allowed to prescribe any medicine in the family until the Government has inspected him and has placed its mark of approbation upon him and the whole operation.

I have no doubt I am making a useless and ineffectual talk, but the whole drift is in one direction. We do not stand up against any of these things. More and more we are drifting into that never-ending tide which establishes at last paternalism. We assume the duties, the burdens, and the responsibilities that individuals ought to assume; we break down every barrier that has heretofore existed of the jurisdiction of the States, and the right and province of the State to regulate things is a shifting, receding shore, constantly encroached upon and constantly swallowed up by this oncoming tide for paternalism and national interference. Senators ought to appreciate that; but I can not stop it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if he would seriously think that we ought to stop it in all cases? This amendment provides for the purchase for analysis of tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products. We have great herds of cattle upon our western plains; we have enormous herds of sheep which constitute the wealth of that country. Some manufacturer down in our Eastern States, for instance—because those are manufacturing States—gets out something which he calls "tuberculin." It is advertised in all the great papers, in all the magazines, and instances are cited of wonderful cures which can be produced by that medicine. A man may own sheep. They may be infected with sheep rot, hoof rot, or the scab. He sends for these antitoxins; he uses them, and by the time all of his sheep or his cattle have died he ascertains that there is no value in the medicine. Would it not have been a good thing if some one in whom the country has confidence could have established that fact, and given him warning that, notwithstanding the great headlines with which it is advertised in all the papers, it was simply a serum that had no effect whatever? We have gone so far in the advertising of these nostrums, and there are so many people who are willing to state that they produce some good, when, in fact, there are no medicinal qualities in them, that there ought to be some method, whether it is paternalistic or otherwise, that will protect the public against frauds of that kind.

Mr. HALE. My answer to that is simply that I do not think this Government is organized for that purpose. I do not think it is within the proper range of Federal power. It is an evil. Human life is beset with evils and pretenses and frauds and false advertising. The view the framers of this Government had was that the less the Federal power interfered in such cases the better it would be; and it would make the fathers, could the dead speak, rise in their graves in protest against the things we are doing, which, in the older days, it was never contemplated should be done.

I suppose this is not the favorite doctrine. I do not know that ever there will a refluent wave of conservatism take possession of the public mind and bring us back to the old bearings. It may be that we shall go on; but there is but one result, and that is the arrogation and assumption of every power by the Federal Government. The State authority and the State jurisdiction are ruthlessly obliterated; the responsibility of the people to take notice themselves, without aid from the Government, and the old legal doctrine or maxim of caveat emptor are being made things of the past. It is only incidental that it comes up on this very remarkable proposition; and the only answer to it is the answer given by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that poison is advertised by somebody and bought by somebody, melancholy results happen from it, and, therefore, the Government should take it in charge. To my view that is not an answer. It only shows how wide and deep is this disease that is now possessing us of looking to the Government for everything.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator's argument will not bear close inspection. This country is not in the condition that it was one hundred years ago. New conditions have arisen, and those new conditions, which could not have been contemplated by our fathers, need new laws for their regulation.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we created the Department of Agriculture because there was a demand for it. The agricultural business of the country had grown to that extent that we needed an Agricultural Department. I know of no use of any Department unless it is to facilitate the growth and development of the business over which it has general control, which, in the case of the Department of Agriculture, is the business of agriculture and stock raising. One of the principal features of agriculture is stock raising. Therefore, if we need that Department at all, we need some one—it does not make any difference whether it is in the Agricultural Department or otherwise—who can determine what are proper remedies for the protection and cure of stock.

If the Senator could suggest any other source from which we could get the information that would be better than the Agricultural Department, then there might be some reason for changing the bill; but it seems to me that that is the Department where the authority ought to be lodged, and that is the place where we ought to look for information; and we ought to give them the power to give us correct and proper information for our own protection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 5, after the word "lines," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase in the open market samples of all tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products, of foreign or domestic manufacture, which are sold in the United States for the detection, prevention, treatment, or cure of diseases of domestic animals, to test the same, and to publish the results of said tests in such manner as he may deem best.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I did not understand the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I make the point that it is clearly legislation. There is no rule authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to do this now; otherwise the amendment would not be in the bill. It is clearly legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maine state his point of order?

Mr. HALE. The point of order I make is clear. Here is a provision giving a power to the Secretary to purchase certain articles for certain purposes and to go on and make tests. If he can do it now, there would be no amendment here; but he clearly can not do it now. It is legislation. But I have said all I want to say in protest of this kind of legislation, and I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 15, line 16, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Animal Industry from $1,682,980 to $1,734,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 16, line 7, before the word "clerks," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "sixteen;" in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "sixteen;" in line 17, after the word "clerk," to insert "or messenger;" in line 20, before the word "clerk," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand;" and in line 23, after the word "gardeners," to insert "or assistants;" so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Plant Industry: One plant physiologist and pathologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,500; one chief clerk, $2,000; one editor, $2,000; one superintendent of gardens and grounds, $1,800; four clerks, class 4, $7,200; seven clerks, class 3, $11,200; twelve clerks, class 2, $16,800; twenty-seven clerks, class 1, $32,400; one seed clerk and superintendent, $1,200; one clerk or artist, $1,200; one artist, $840; sixteen clerks, at $1,000 each, $16,000; six clerks, at $900 each, $5,400; eight clerks, at $840 each, $6,720; one clerk, $800; eleven clerks, at $720 each, $7,920; three clerks, at $660 each, $1,980; two clerks, at $600 each, $1,200; one clerk or messenger, $480; one photographer or clerk, $900; one assistant photographer, $600; one illustrator or clerk, $900; one carpenter, $1,000; one carpenter, $840; two gardeners or assistants, at $1,000 each, $2,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred and forty" and insert "nine hundred;" in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and eighty" and insert "eight hundred;" on page 18, line 1, before the word "skilled," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred and sixty" and insert "two thousand four hundred;" in line 4, before the word "messenger," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," strike out "one thousand four hundred and forty" and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" and in line 7 to strike out "sixty thousand one hundred and sixty" and insert "sixty-three thousand two hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

Two plumbers, at $900 each, $1,800; three firemen, at $720 each, $2,160; two clerks or messengers, at $840 each, $1,680; three skilled laborers, at $720 each, $2,160; three skilled laborers, at $660 each, $1,980; six skilled laborers, at $600 each, $3,600; one messenger, $660; three messengers, at $600 each, $1,800; three watchmen, at $720 each, $2,160; two watchmen, at $600 each, $1,200; five skilled laborers or messengers, at $480 each, $2,400; two messenger boys, at $360 each, $720; one messenger boy, $300; in all, $163,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 16, after the word

"production," to strike out "and the origination and improvement of" and insert "to originate and improve;" so as to read:

General expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry: To investigate fruits, fruit trees, grain, cotton, tobacco, vegetables, grasses, forage, drug, medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other plants and plant industries, in cooperation with other branches of the Department, the State experiment stations, and practical farmers; to study plant and orchard diseases and demonstrate the treatment of same; to study plant physiology in relation to crop production; to originate and improve crops by breeding and selection, etc.

Mr. HALE. On the theory upon which this legislation proceeds, this is even better than invading the province of the individual or of the State. It is invading the domain of nature, of Providence, for it provides for the originating as well as the improvement of crops. Some very bright man suggested that who, in looking over the bill, thought to incorporate some provision that would still further extend the Federal power, and having whipped out the States and the individuals, it now takes the province of nature and originates crops.

I congratulate the Senator from Vermont that he has gotten nearer to the line of absolute, overwhelming, unmistakable control of all things by the Federal Government than anybody has ever got before.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 19, line 3, after the word "preventing," to strike out "algæ" and insert "algal;" so as to read:

To cultivate and distribute these nitrogen fixers; to study and find methods for preventing algal and other contaminations of water supplies, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "ninety;" so as to read:

For actual and necessary traveling expenses; for telegraph and telephone service; * * * and for all other necessary expenses, $490,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, in line 15, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to especially investigate parasites and orchard diseases prevalent in the Ozark Mountain region of the State of Missouri, and to work out, if possible, in cooperation with the fruit experiment station at Mountain Grove, the problem of prevention of such diseases and destruction of parasites, and diffuse information along these lines.

Mr. BERRY. The proposition of the committee is to strike out the proviso. There is objection to that. I wish to know if it would be in order to offer an amendment to it before the motion to strike out is put? I think under the rules we can perfect a paragraph before a motion is made to strike out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Then I desire to move, in line 19, to strike out the word "State" and insert "States;" and after the word "Missouri" to add "and Arkansas;" so that it will read:

In the Ozark Mountain region of the States of Missouri and Arkansas.

Mr. PROCTOR. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not ask for that amendment. This matter came up before the committee, and Doctor Galloway, the head of the Bureau, said there was no occasion to name any special point. If the appropriation——

Mr. BERRY. I want to amend it before the motion to strike out is put. I desire to put in the word "Arkansas," and then the provision will apply both to Missouri and Arkansas. If Missouri is to remain in there, I want Arkansas put in.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 19, page 21, it is proposed to strike out the word "State" and insert "States;" and, after the word "Missouri," to insert "and Arkansas."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I am at a loss to understand why the Committee on Agriculture should recommend the striking out of this provision.

Mr. PROCTOR. The reason is that the work is going on now, and if the proviso is kept in it should apply not only to Missouri and Arkansas, but to Idaho and California and Colorado and numerous other States. There is no occasion to specify any State. Doctor Galloway has general authority to do the work, and he stated in his evidence before the committee, in reply to a question from the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]:

How about that proviso on page 20?

* * * * * * *

We do not need that in here. It was put in by a Member on the floor of the House to have some work done down in southern Missouri. We are doing that work anyway now.

He further stated that his authority was sufficient to do it in any part of the country. There is no occasion to specify any particular section.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the reason why it is stricken out is that it is a little restrictive on the general power conferred somewhere else in the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not see that it is restrictive——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. Because it does not limit it to that place.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; it does.

Mr. PROCTOR. The power is general to do the work elsewhere.

Mr. SPOONER. No. It says:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to especially investigate parasites and orchard diseases prevalent in the Ozark Mountain region of the State of Missouri.

That is restrictive; therefore I suppose it is unsatisfactory and incompatible with the ambition and genius of the Department.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Secretary has full authority to do this work anywhere. He has had it for years. It is not anything new.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to have been thought by the House that there was special necessity for requiring some peculiar attention to be given to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri. It is a discrimination.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] desires to make some remarks on this matter, but I think he will agree with what I have to say.

I desire to say that that particular section of the country—the Ozark Mountains, in the southern part of Missouri and the northern part of Arkansas—is, in my judgment, the finest fruit country in the United States. The county in which I live—Benton—has more apple trees, according to the report of the Superintendent of the Census, than any other county in the United States, and Missouri produces more apples than any other State in the Union, according to that census.

It is said—I do not know whether it is true or not—that in the Ozark region, because of the climate or something else, there is a peculiar kind of disease that sometimes comes to the trees, and needs special investigation with a view to discovering something to remedy the evil that comes to and injures the apple, due to a parasite, as my friend the Senator from Missouri suggests. I think that was the idea of the House in putting it in for the State of Missouri. But there was no reason whatever why Missouri should be included without including Arkansas also, it having the same character of land and the same fruit and immediately running along the northern border of my State. Both of the Senators from Missouri are familiar with the situation.

A great source of revenue in all that section comes from our fruits, and especially from the apple. On the Missouri side there are very magnificent peach orchards. All the northern part of my State—southwest Missouri, northwest Arkansas—constitutes the finest apple region in the United States, in my judgment, and it has so been reported by the Census Bureau.

The Senator from Missouri makes a suggestion to me. In order to give an illustration as to its importance I will say that some three or four years ago—I forget the year—in the county in which I live the fruits and the apples shipped out of the county over the railroads, saying nothing of those which were conveyed away in wagons, came to the value of one million two hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars for one year. It shows something of the importance of fruit raising in that section of Arkansas and Missouri.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I am under the impression that Doctor Galloway, who was before the committee, made a statement relative to this matter in which he said that this parasite, this disease, prevails in that particular part of Missouri, in the Ozark Mountains, and nowhere else, and for that reason he hoped, if the Senate agreed to put this provision back, that the language as passed by the House would remain as it is.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas was agreed to, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. STONE. And that being so, the provision needs some other changes. In line 20 the word "station" should be changed to "stations"—be put in the plural—and the words "at Mountain Grove," in line 21, should be stricken out, and, instead, the words "of said States" inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have no objection to these amendments, but I think the whole amendment now ought to be agreed to, striking out the entire clause. On page 18 there is full authority given to the Secretary "to study plant and orchard diseases and demonstrate the treatment of same." The testimony before the committee was that that work was actually going on now, and that this proviso is not necessary; that the work would be carried on not only in Missouri and Arkansas, but in various other States. It is not advisable, it is not good form of legislation, as I think the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will state, to have all these special provisions for local work here and there when it is all embraced in the general provision.

Mr. HALE. I think if any Senator has found something that is not in this bill, he ought to state it.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to say that the testimony on the hearing was that this particular work of investigation in the Ozark region is in progress?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is going on now. Those are his words, as the Senator will see by looking at the report of the hearings——

Mr. STONE. Is it being carried on under the auspices of the Department at the present time?

Mr. PROCTOR. Under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of Plant Industry. The Secretary has plenty of money to carry it on, and proposes to carry it on. His statement was broad and full on that point. If it had not been, I should certainly have favored putting this amendment in; but as it is entirely unnecessary, and if retained should be extended to other States, and then quite likely all might not be included which ought to be included, I hope the proviso will be stricken out. Idaho is one that was mentioned, I know. It is a trouble that may appear in any State in the Union. The authority should be broad if given at all, and it is given broadly.

Mr. STONE. I was informed this morning by one of the Representatives in the House from Missouri, whose district lies in the Ozark Mountain region, that this provision, now sought to be stricken out, was inserted in the bill on his motion or at his instance when the bill was in the House. He called my attention to the fact that there was this general provision in the bill which the Senator from Vermont has pointed out, but he told me that the people there had not been able to get the Department of Agriculture to make any investigation in that section, and that notwithstanding the efforts they have made, and the struggles they have made to have it done, they could not even kidnap one of the officials to go down there to examine into the causes that do injuries to the orchards.

Mr. PROCTOR. I can assure the Senator personally and in the strongest terms that the work is going on and will be carried on satisfactorily to him and to his constituents. Doctor Galloway said:

> We are doing that work anyway now.

He amplified that statement considerably, but that is what is printed. I erased the rest in editing the report, to save space in printing.

Mr. STONE. I suppose the Senator understands that this is really a matter of very great importance to southern Missouri and northern Arkansas.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is to other sections as well.

Mr. STONE. I presume that is true, but I am informed through various sources—the Senator from Arkansas told me—that there is some peculiar parasite that stings the fruit in that country which is unknown to other fruit-growing sections. For that reason I understand it is desired to have this work certainly carried on in one of the greatest fruit-growing sections of the country. There is not a greater fruit-producing region anywhere than in the Ozark Mountains.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to a provision in this bill that is a little inconsistent with the contention he is now making. On page 14, which is a part of the provision making an appropriation for investigating the diseases of animals, meats, etc., there is, at the close of that long provision, this clause:

> That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated, to especially investigate hemorrhagic septicemia, infectious cerebro-spinal meningitis, and malignant catarrh, prevalent among domestic animals in the State of Minnesota.

Under the general provision on that question, the preceding part, that investigation could be made in the State of Minnesota, you set apart $5,000 for special investigation of particular animal diseases in that State. The fruit industry is just as important to northern Arkansas and southern Missouri, covering as large an area of country, as the animal industry is to the State of Minnesota; and why should the Senate—for whose judgment and fairness I have the greatest respect—allow an exception of that kind in one case and deny it in the other?

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator will notice there is a difference in the two provisions. In the one referred to, in regard to Minnesota and adjoining States, the Secretary is simply authorized to expend $5,000. In this provision he is authorized and directed to expend.

Mr. STONE. Would the Senator consent to making it "authorized;" to strike out "and directed?"

Mr. PROCTOR. If the general language is sufficient to cover the case in Minnesota that the Senator has referred to, I should certainly be in favor of striking out that proviso as well, as a useless provision. This other proviso was especially brought to our attention in the hearings, and that is the reason for striking it out. I have not had opportunity to investigate regarding Minnesota. Certainly I should favor striking out the words "and directed."

Mr. BERRY. Let them go out.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to those words going out. Let it go in that form.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will not object to that at this time. I will reserve the privilege of bringing it up later when the bill is in the Senate, if necessary.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand that the words "and directed" are to be stricken out?

Mr. PROCTOR. The words "and directed" are to be stricken out.

Mr. WARNER. And the others remain as they are in the bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 16 it is proposed to strike out the words "and directed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Do I understand that the committee amendment is disagreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee is to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WARNER. To strike out the words as amended.

Mr. BERRY. The whole section is not stricken out. The words "and directed" were stricken out, and now the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out the entire clause.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pardon me. I understood the chairman of the committee to consent to these words remaining in.

Mr. BERRY. He did consent. The Senator from Vermont said he had no objection to the section remaining.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the section remaining?

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee to strike out the paragraph is disagreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask the consent of the Senate, with the permission of the Senator from Vermont, as I am called from the Chamber, to offer an amendment at a later part of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will turn to page 59 of the bill, which has reference to appointments——

Mr. TELLER. Line 22?

Mr. HALE. Line 22. Last year, as some Senators will remember, after considerable debate upon the question of transfers of clerks who had been, some of them, for years in the Departments, from one Department to another, Congress put this into the law:

> All classified laborers whose positions are transferred from the lump funds to the statutory rolls are hereby placed in the classified service without further examination in the grades and at the rates of compensation herein provided.

That was put in by the Senate at the end of quite a long debate; upon the very proper theory that these persons who had been there so long were presumed to be fully as competent as any examination could disclose. So we provided that they should be placed in the classified service.

I have been told that notwithstanding that it is claimed that although we put them upon the classified rolls they are not to be promoted without further examination. That was not the intention of Congress, of course, and I offer this amendment to cure that condition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 22, after the word "therefor," insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That all classified laborers whose positions were transferred from the lump funds to the statutory rolls by the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture approved March 3, 1905, and who were by the last clause of that act—

Which I have just read—placed in the classified service without further examination in the grades and at the rates of compensation provided in said act, are hereby made eligible—for promotion without further examination.

Like any other clerks—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine, which has just been read.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have nothing to say in regard to the amendment except to state the situation briefly. The Senator has stated it correctly, that there was full discussion, and he has given the purport of it. I know I had no doubt myself, and I think there was none in the Senate but that the action last year put those persons into the civil service with all the rights that others had to promotion. But the civil service authorities held otherwise. I saw the Commissioners and told them how I felt sure it was understood by the Senate, but it did not avail, and examinations have been conducted. Some have succeeded in passing the examination and some have tried. I know some have tried three times. I know of one case quite recently where the person succeeded on the third trial. Some have failed so far.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 21, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points of export as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as the evidence at hand may warrant.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. Add after the word "warrant," in line 9, page 22, the following:

The officer or employee obtaining such sample or parcel for examination shall ascertain the necessary facts and make and sign a certificate, showing that the same is made under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, certifying the date and fact of such inspection, the approximate number of bushels in each consignment, the vessel in which the same is exported, the consignor or shipper, the consignee or purchaser, the provision of law under which such certificate is made, the kind, quality, and also grade of such grain or seed, its condition at the time of shipment as ascertained by such examination, and any other facts which may be proper to clearly indicate its character. Such certificate shall be issued in duplicate, one to be mailed to the shipper or consignor, the other to the purchaser or consignee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the amendment made by the committee is certainly in the right direction. I can not say that it is a step in the right direction, because it can hardly be said to be a step, but it is placing Congressional action in the right direction, and to meet one of the greatest frauds to the agricultural people of the United States that is in existence to-day.

The amendment which I have proposed seeks to make the amendment of the committee effective. I desire to address the Senate upon the amendment at some length because of its great importance. It is nearly 5 o'clock now. In all probability the bill can not be completed this evening, and I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not let it go over until to-morrow, or at least pass this amendment over until to-morrow, when I wish to address the Senate upon the amendment and matters relating to it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. PERKINS. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, I will say on behalf of the committee that it may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR entered the Chamber.

Mr. KEAN. The chairman of the committee is here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to join in the request of the Senator from North Dakota, because I want to ask the consideration of a bill to which there will be no objection, I think.

Mr. PROCTOR rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have submitted an amendment to the amendment which was just read, and I ask the Senator if he will not pass it over until I can discuss it to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly; if the Senator wishes to speak on it, let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PROCTOR. And we will go on with the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the request of the Senator from North Dakota to be that the Senator should consent that the bill be laid by until to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. Only the amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Only the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I make that request. It would not inconvenience the Senator inasmuch as the bill must go over anyhow.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let us go on with the bill for half an hour.

Mr. FORAKER. It is now ten minutes to 5.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let us go on with the bill until a quarter past 5.

Mr. FORAKER. Well; or until 5 o'clock.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 22, after line 9, to insert:

For improving and macadamizing the present gravel roads on the Department grounds, under the direction of the Director of the Office of Public Roads, $3,500, and the same shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-two" and insert "forty-seven;" so as to read:

Purchase and distribution of seeds: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for rent and repairs; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, gas and electric current, traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $247,920, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 19, after the word "franks," to insert "in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine and as may be satisfactory to the Postmaster-General;" so as to read:

An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the Department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine and as may be satisfactory to the Postmaster-General; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the chairman of the committee state whether this is in lieu of the usual annual appropriation for the purchase and distribution of seeds?

Mr. LODGE. It is exactly the same.

Mr. PROCTOR. The usual provision is retained. There is no change.

Mr. PATTERSON. And the usual amount?

Mr. PROCTOR. The usual amount is appropriated.

Mr. McCREARY. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question? Is the appropriation in the bill the same as was made heretofore?

Mr. PROCTOR. For the distribution of seeds?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is the same precisely.

Mr. McCREARY. And the same amount?

Mr. PROCTOR. The same amount exactly as it was carried in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 25, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-seven" and insert "forty-two;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided, further, That $42,780 of which sum, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries or from our possessions for experiments with reference to their introduction into and cultivation in this country, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, in line 13, after the word "stations," to insert the following proviso:

And provided also, That $5,000 of the sum thus appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the erection of a laboratory and office building at the plant introduction garden at Chico, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 18, to increase the total of the appropriation for free-seed distribution from $242,920 to $247,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 21, to increase the total of the appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Plant Industry from $906,120 to $919,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Forest Service," on page 28, after line 2, to insert:

That the forest-reserve special fund provided for in section 5 of the act approved February 1, 1905, entitled "An act providing for the transfer of forest reserves from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture," shall continue until otherwise provided by law; but after June 30, 1908, it shall not be expended except in accordance with specific estimates of expenditures to be made from said fund for the succeeding fiscal year, to be submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture with the estimates of appropriation in the annual Book of Estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 13, to insert:

That 10 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will consent to amend this provision by striking out "ten," in line 14, and inserting "twenty;" so as to read "20 per cent?" I do not care to take up time to go into an explanation of this matter. I have discussed it with other Senators from forest-reserve States, and they think it should be as high as 25 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. I think it ought to be 25 per cent.

Mr. FULTON. I will make it that, if the Senator has no objection. It is simply in lieu of taxes.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. Pinchot was before us, and he had gone over this matter very carefully. There was in the committee quite a strong objection to confining it to the States where these forest reserves exist. Some thought that it should be distributed to all the States and Territories of the country. I combatted that because it would be such a division that it would amount to very little. As this is a new provision, I think it is much better to let it stand as it is, as Mr. Pinchot has prepared it. In many counties it will be a very large proportion of the taxes.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. PROCTOR. If, after a year's trial, it appears that any section is suffering I shall certainly be very glad to have a larger percentage given to the locality.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I trust the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Colorado will not insist upon the amendment to the amendment, for if they do I fear the point of order will be raised that it is new legislation. I introduced a bill, which has been pending before the Committee on Public Lands for some time, and we have failed to have favorable action upon it. We have the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief Forester for the 10 per cent proposed. He would not exceed that recommendation, but admitted the justice of our claim. We have, I think, over 104,000,000 acres of forest reserves in the country. There are 102 different forest reserves, 100 of which are in the United States and 2 of which are in Alaska. There are counties in the West—in Nevada, Oregon, California, and Washington—where nearly the whole of the county, or 50 per cent of the county, has been absorbed in a forest reserve.

But I will not weary the Senate by going into details. We can carry the amendment of the committee. The point of order will not be made if we do not exceed 10 per cent. I hope our friends from Colorado and Oregon will assent to the amendment of the committee, and that it will be adopted.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall insist on the amendment to the amendment, but I want to make a word of explanation. The Senator from Vermont says that they considered the advisability of distributing this fund among all the States. It seems to me it must be apparent on a moment's thought how absolutely unjust such a proposition would be. These lands are withdrawn from taxation, withdrawn from settlement, withdrawn from all private use. They can not be appropriated to any private enterprises, but are held for the benefit of the whole people of the country and in order that the forests of the country may be reserved.

The entire country gets the benefit of reserving the forests equally with the localities there, but these lands have been withdrawn in the States. For instance, over one-fifth of the entire area of Oregon is withdrawn from entry and can not be taken up for homesteading nor the title acquired in any manner. It does not pay any taxes. It does not contribute in any manner to the public expense or to the public burden.

This is proposed in lieu of those taxes, but it is not equally compensatory at all. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to let the 10 per cent go. It amounts to nothing. If we can not get what is a measure of justice, I say lose it all.

Mr. TELLER. So do I.

Mr. FULTON. I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, to be prevented from presenting my views on this subject by a threat that it will all be knocked out.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] tells us that Mr. Pinchot has consented that this might go in, or words to that effect——

Mr. PERKINS. He recommended it, if the Senator please. I used the word "recommendation."

Mr. TELLER. But the Senator also said, as I recall it, that he would not recommend anything else, and that therefore we ought to accept it.

Now, Mr. President, I hope somebody will make a point of order on this amendment if we leave it at 10 per cent. I would not like to do it myself, but I really hope somebody will. It is simply a beggarly amount. Nearly one-half of all the forests of the State of Colorado to-day are reservations. A very few of them might properly be reservations, because it would conserve undoubtedly the irrigating purposes of the State, but I will venture to say that not 25 per cent are of any value whatever to the irrigating interests of the State. As for lumber, they are practically of no value except the coarse lumber that might be used in the neighborhood.

Not long since I heard a Senator say that these reserves were to save the lumber for the whole people of the United States. Mr. President, I will venture to say now that a majority of the lumber used in Colorado comes from the States of Oregon and Washington. We have some fair timber, pine, in the southern part of the State, on the mountains generally. It is only good for the coarsest kind of lumber. Ever since we have had a railroad we have shipped our pine lumber either from Chicago or from the Mississippi River, and a little from Oregon and Washington.

About one-half of Colorado is a mountain country and about one-half is plain. About 50,000 square miles are plain, about 50,000 square miles are mountain and mountain valleys, and the most of the mountain country has more or less timber upon it.

Mr. President, areas as great as many of the States have been withdrawn; withdrawn without any application from anybody in the State of Colorado; withdrawn without even consultation with the representatives of that State on this floor or in the other body; withdrawn in some instances against the protests of the entire delegation. These great areas are now dedicated to solitude and silence. Nobody can go in. A man can not even take his gun and go there without permission from the forest-reserve people. No taxes are paid. There are valleys there that would support a population big enough to maintain a school and a church that we are absolutely prohibited from touching. If the cattle of a farmer stray into one of those reservations, he gets into trouble immediately with the Department. The Department, without any authority of law whatever, have been staking out this man and the other man and saying, "You may let your herd go in there, and you may pay so much a head." The ordinary settler could not let his cows and young cattle go in unless he would first make an arrangement by which he would pay to the Bureau of Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM. What becomes of the money?

Mr. TELLER. What becomes of the money, the Senator from Illinois asks. By one of the foolish provisions that we are often guilty of here, we provided that whenever they collected this money they might expend it. The pending bill, I believe, has fixed a time when it shall go into the Treasury.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say that the testimony before the committee was that we were receiving for the sale of timber that was inspected and pasturage and other privileges in the forest reserves something over half of our annual expenditure; and it was stated by the Chief Forester that he hoped in less than five years the forest reserves would be self-sustaining, and that the improvement in timber would greatly increase by the preservation of the reserves.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that we cleared last year about $400,000, and there is an appropriation in this bill for one million.

Mr. LATIMER. Between five and six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. TELLER. Between five and six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PERKINS. Last year we appropriated $875,000, and the total expenditure was $1,400,000. This year it is estimated that the receipts will amount to $600,000.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it is the theory of the Forestry Bureau, as I suppose it might be called, that they are going to sell the timber. I know what I am now going to state to be a fact. A settler living on the prairies adjoining one of these reserves went in and hauled out two or three loads of dead timber—practically dead pine knots, where the body of the tree had disappeared and the knots and the sap in them remained. He was compelled to pay 25 cents a load to one of these traveling inspectors, who, I have no doubt, put the money in his pocket. I do not know that he did.

Mr. President, the United States ought not to be a timber speculator; it ought not to set up a timber establishment. I deny the right of the Government of the United States to go in, even under the present law, and pick out a tree and say, "Now, there is a tree you may cut, and the trees out here you may not cut." That is the Prussian system and that is the system in some of the other European countries, but we have a different form of government here.

I do not know, and nobody can tell me, where the authority comes from that the Secretary of the Interior, or, under present conditions, the Secretary of Agriculture, can send a man out and authorize him to tell me what I am to cut on the public land. When the forest is reserved, it is reserved, and there is not any law to authorize anyone to cut it. There is not any law, in my judgment, that authorizes anyone to say to one man, "You may put your herd into a forest reserve," and to another, "You may not." Yet that is what is being done. Nor do I conceive that anyone has a right to say to one man, "You may put so many head of sheep or cattle in," and to another man, "You may put so many head in," and to fix the price they are to pay.

The Senator who has this bill in charge says that the income from these forests would, in some counties, amount to a large sum. Mr. President, the Government has sold no timber to amount to anything in the State of Colorado, and it will sell none except what it may dole out to some poor settler—a few loads of timber, perhaps, and charge him 25 cents or 50 cents a load for it. There is no market for timber of that character there and there can not be any market for it created there. Practically nothing will be derived by us from that source. We get no taxes from the men who live within a forest reserve. If the forest reserve was not there some of this land, at least, would come within the taxing power of the State and county.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Colorado let me interrupt him right there?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I call the Senator's attention to the amount of revenue that could possibly be derived to the country from the nature of the timber land. I do not know the condition in the Senator's State, but in my own State the timber land would yield on an average 12,000 feet board measure per acre. The amount would vary. The timber in some places would be greater and in some places less; but, say, from 12,000 feet up to 17,000 feet board measure per acre; and at an average of a dollar per thousand stumpage, which is about the average price, that would be $17 per acre in fifty years which would be derived from that source, and we would be entitled to 10 per cent of that, or $1.70.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator that what they may do in the timber market of Oregon, Washington, or California or even of Montana is no criterion to judge of what they may do in Colorado. We have an entirely different forest condition there. There are thousands and thousands of acres in forest reserves over which I could take a light buggy and drive without injuring the buggy. The trees would not prevent my doing it. They are scattered; they are short; they are worthless; and the Government will sell none of that timber, and has never sold a single dollar's worth of it, except, as I have stated, to some poor settler. I say it is an imposition on the settler.

Mr. President, I am not speaking simply for Colorado. Some other States are differently situated. The revenues which come here are not derived from timber sales in Colorado. We should not get much out of Colorado. But I want to read this provision of the amendment. It says:

> That 10 per cent of all moneys received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated—

That is not enough. The amendment goes on to say—> to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated.

Mr. President, we in the West are able to take care of ourselves; and when it comes to determining where the money that belongs to us shall go, we do not want the guardianship of this nation, either as a State or as individuals.

The threat of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] that some Senator would make a point of order on this amendment, as I stated in the beginning, does not frighten me a particle. I would rather see the point of order made than see this amendment passed in the shape it now is. We will pay for making our own roads and we will pay for maintaining our own schools.

The State of Colorado, Mr. President, has taken whatever subsidy the Government has been willing to give to it as a State to maintain the schools; but years before there was an acre of land surveyed and years before anybody could lay a claim to an acre of that land we established our school system, which we have continued to maintain. We established a free-school system, and we have maintained it from that day to this hour. We did not need even the donation which was given to various States of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to maintain our schools. We ourselves would have maintained them if the Government had never given us an acre of land; and we will maintain them without the little, contemptible sum we would get out of this provision should it be enacted into law.

Mr. President, I feel that it is a personal indignity that it should be supposed that we would be satisfied with 10 per cent; and I felt somewhat humiliated when the Senator said that Mr. Pinchot would not agree that it should be any more than 10 per cent. The time will come, Mr. President, when somebody will tell you what shall be your appropriations and what shall be your method of legislation. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] said, there have been changes here; and it may be, Mr. President, that by and by we shall consent to have it written down that we are either incapable or unwilling to discharge the duties which our States put upon us when they send us here as their representatives.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I do not want this occasion to go without making the statement that we are in favor of withdrawing land within our States for forest reserves. So far as the people of the State of California are concerned, they are entirely satisfied with and approve the action of withdrawing public lands from settlement in the State of California for forest reservations. In the southern part of the State it has been the means of increasing our water supply, and in the northern part of the State it has been the means of saving what little timber we had left from the great companies that had by fraudulent means acquired thousands of acres of timber lands, and the timber lands now in forest reserves will be saved for future generations.

It may be that other States have not suffered by reason of frauds, but the people of the State of California are willing that the timber lands should be in possession of the Government and not subject to entry, and thus stop the fraudulent acquisition of timber lands that has taken place in the State in the past few years. Whilst some of this land has been honestly taken up, the large part of it has been taken up by dummies and transferred to corporations, and held for speculative purposes. So far as the people of the State of California are concerned, they are heartily in favor of the administration of the forest reserves under the management of Mr. Pinchot, and, in my opinion, the reservation of these lands have been and will continue to be a great benefit to my State.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not know what has been the condition in the State of California, and that is not material; but we have never had those great frauds in Colorado; we have never had this great aggregation of timber land, because our timber was not of sufficient value, and there has been no inducement to make people take up land and hold it for the timber. We have had some complaint at times about the coal lands, but never about the timber lands. We have got some few timber reservations which are well laid out upon the top of the range; but they do not comprise, I suppose, 5 per cent of the entire reservations. In one forest reserve that has been reserved for years there is not a tree of any size or age, and we had a good deal of difficulty in getting that released. There is nothing there but brush, and not much of that.

Mr. President, I do not mean that forest reserves should not be made somewhere; but I say there ought to be some intelligent discrimination as to where they shall be made. It is not necessary to make a forest reserve in every place where trees grow. Every forest reserve is not calculated to preserve the water. What I complain of is that the Department sends irresponsible people out there to make these selections; that they send a class of people utterly without judgment and discretion, and sometimes without integrity, to take possession and control of the forests, and to tell us what we may do and what we may not do. I make no attack upon anything that concerns other States except Colorado; and it is about all I can do to attend to that under present conditions.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the affairs of Colorado. I have no doubt there are places where land has been included within forest reserves where it should be withdrawn and opened to homestead entry; and there is a bill now pending before the Senate which permits homestead entry within forest reserves.

Mr. FULTON. That bill has already passed both Houses, and is now in conference.

Mr. TELLER. Has the appropriation bill been laid aside?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I will simply state that I will not press the amendment, because there are a number of Senators from the forest-reserve States who are willing to accept the 10 per cent rather than get nothing. Personally I would prefer to lose that. If I were simply representing an interest that is peculiar to my own State, I would insist on the amendment, but under the circumstances I will not. If it were not so late in the evening I should like to discuss——

Mr. TELLER. The bill is not going to be passed to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oregon withdraws his amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not do that.

Mr. KEAN. If this amendment can not be disposed of this evening—of course, I wish it could—I will ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] whether he is not willing to have an executive session?

Mr. PROCTOR. Inasmuch as we do not seem to be able to pass the bill to-night, I shall not object to an executive session.

Mr. KEAN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

RESURVEY OF A TOWNSHIP IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1178) providing for the resurvey of a township of land in Colorado.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, afted the word "occupied," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That before any survey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of said lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to survey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be surveyed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be made a resurvey of the lands in township No. 16 south, of range No. 71 west, of the sixth principal meridian, in Fremont County, in the State of Colorado; and all rules and regulations of the Interior Department requiring petitions from all settlers of said township asking for resurvey and agreement to abide by the result of same, so far as these lands are concerned, are hereby abrogated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide claim of any actual occupant of any of said lands so occupied: Provided further, That before any survey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of said lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to survey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be surveyed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KEAN. I promised to yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A Senator's right to the floor must come through the Chair.

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Washington, if the bill he seeks to have passed is not too long.

Mr. PILES. It is a short bill.

Mr. KEAN. Very well.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17127) to provide for the subdivision and sale of certain lands in the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "acre," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no date shall be fixed for the sale of any of said lands until at least ninety days after the Secretary of the Interior has approved said appraisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

Provided further, That any settler who is in actual occupation of any portion of such lands at the date of the passage of this act who has settled thereon in good faith for the purpose of securing a home and is by law entitled to make a homestead entry shall be entitled to enter the land so occupied not exceeding 20 acres in a body, according to the Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon payment to the Government of the sum of $2.50 per acre for each acre entered by him and upon showing residence and cultivation of such lands in the manner and for the length of time required by the homestead laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM IN MORRISON COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KEAN. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17758) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota. The bill was reported this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?,

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHARVES AND PIERS IN THE WATERS OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of waters in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to amend the bill on page 2, line 13, after the word "or," at the end of the line, by inserting the words "with the approval of the Secretary of War."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, after the word "or," at the end of the line, it is proposed to amend the bill by inserting the words "with the approval of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Also, on page 2, line 22, after the words "Porto Rico," I move to insert the words "exercising the right of purchase as aforesaid."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, after the words "Porto Rico," it is proposed to insert "exercising the right of purchase as aforesaid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 3, line 1, before the word "Government," I move to insert the words "Secretary of War for the."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, before the word "Government," it is proposed to insert "Secretary of War for the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. On page 3, line 2, after the word "or," I move to insert "by the governor of Porto Rico for."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, after the word "or," it is proposed to insert the words "by the governor of Porto Rico for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. On the same page, line 2, after the words "Porto Rico," I move to amend by inserting the words "as the case may be."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 2, after the words "Porto Rico," it is proposed to insert "as the case may be."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. As all the foregoing amendments are to paragraph "a," I ask that that paragraph may be read as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read paragraph "a" as amended, as follows:

(a) No authorization to any person to construct, extend, or maintain any such structure shall continue for a longer period than the period set forth in such authorization, and shall provide that the Government of the United States, or, with the approval of the Secretary of War, the government of Porto Rico shall have the right at any time after the expiration of thirty years from the date of such authorization, and after three months' notice, to take any such structure from the owner thereof upon paying the value of the same at the time it shall be so taken, and the amount paid shall not exceed the original cost of the same as may be fixed under paragraph (f) hereof. In case the Government of the United States or the government of Porto Rico, exercising the right of purchase as aforesaid, should claim that the value of the structure when seized and taken is less than its original cost, the extent of deterioration or diminution from the original value shall be determined by a board or commission of four members, two of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of War for the Government of the United States or by the governor of Porto Rico for the government of Porto Rico, as the case may be, and two by the owner of such structure. If the four members thus chosen and appointed shall not be able to agree, they shall choose by mutual agreement a referee, whose decision shall be final, but in no case shall the amount to be paid exceed the original cost as fixed under the provisions of said paragraph (f). If the four members thus chosen and appointed are unable by mutual agreement to select a referee, then the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall be the referee, and his decision shall be final.

Mr. FORAKER. Now, at the end of paragraph (c) I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 2, after the words "Secretary of War," at the end of paragraph (c), it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That vessels having contracts with the Government of the United States for carrying the mail may, with the consent of the owner of said structure and under the control and direction of the Secretary of War, be given a preference to expedite the landing and discharge of their cargoes at said structure.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RECORDER OF DEEDS IN OSAGE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17220) providing for a recorder of deeds, and so forth, in the Osage Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5539) for the relief of the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. KEAN. Is that the bill which has already been read?

Mr. BURNHAM. I do not know that it has been.

Mr. KEAN. Are there two of these bills?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Spain," to strike out the remainder of the bill in the following words:

And in said resettlement and readjustment the same rules shall be applied as have been applied by the Auditor and Comptroller in the settlement of the like claims of other States. And allowances shall also be made in such resettlement and readjustment of the same class or character of items disallowed that were disallowed in the settlement of the like claim of the State of Iowa, for which appropriation was made under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1900.

And insert:

Under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved July 8, 1898, March 3, 1899, and April 27, 1904.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to resettle and readjust the claim of the State of Rhode Island for and on account of its expenditures in raising volunteers during the war with Spain, under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved July 8, 1898, March 3, 1899, and April 27, 1904.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOLLY MANUFACTURING COMPANY, OF BUFFALO, N. Y.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 6025) for the relief of the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid from the appropriation for the water department, District of Columbia, extension of the high-service system, to the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y., the sum of $6,880, deducted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as a penalty under contract No. 3324, dated November 11, 1903, and supplemental contract No. 3324, dated February 24, 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEAVER LODGE, I. O. O. F., OF EKALAKA, MONT.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6165) granting to Beaver Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Ekalaka, Mont., certain land for public cemetery purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAM YACHT WATURUS.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to have the bill (S. 6004) to provide an American register for the steam yacht Waturus considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That said vessel shall not at any time hereafter engage in the coasting trade, under penalty of forfeiture.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steam yacht Waturus to be registered as a vessel of the United States: Provided, That said vessel shall not at any time hereafter engage in the coasting trade under penalty of forfeiture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO CANON CITY, COLO.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado for a moment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I reported from the Committee on Public Lands this morning a House bill unanimously recommended by the committee with amendments. It is the bill (H. R. 4546) ceding to the city of Canon City, Colo., certain lands for park purposes. I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "City," to insert the article "a;" so as to read:

That there is hereby granted to the city of Canon City, a municipal corporation in the county of Fremont and State of Colorado, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 1, after the word "forfeited," to insert the word "canceled" and a comma; so as to read:

Shall lapse, become forfeited, canceled, or abandoned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the report in connection with this bill may be published in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. PATTERSON this morning is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4546) ceding to the city of Canon City, Colo., certain lands for park purposes, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with amendments and as amended recommend that it do pass.

The suggested amendments are as follows:

In line 3, page 1 of the bill, after the word "City," insert the letter "a."

In line 1, page 3 of the bill, after the word "forfeited," insert the word "canceled."

This question has come before Congress in two forms—one to create a national park and the other to cede the land to Canon City for park purposes, and your committee have chosen the latter course for the reason that national parks are liable to cause more or less expense for their care, thus necessitating frequent appropriations from the National Treasury. By turning it over to Canon City and making ample provision for its reversion to the Federal Government in case the city refuses to accept the charge of its care or neglects in the future to care for it, the land is in this way withdrawn from entry, which is the most desirable object of this legislation, since it is worthless for any purpose except a vantage ground from which to view the Royal Gorge of the Arkansas River.

While the land remained subject to entry there was a constant liability that some speculator might get possession of it and charge tourists unreasonable prices for the privilege of seeing one of the grandest scenes in the Rocky Mountains.

This bill was referred to the Interior Department, and both propositions were considered by them, viz, to cede the land to Canon City or to make of it a national park. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommended that it be made a national park, and the Secretary of the Interior concurred in this report.

Attention is called to the fact, however, that the bill ceding the land to Canon City has since been amended so that Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal this act at any time, in which event the land will revert to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOCK NO. 4, COOSA RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 19473) authorizing the use of the waters in Coosa River at Lock No. 4 in Alabama. It is a local measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into a contract with any individual or corporation, private or municipal, preference being given to riparian owners and their assigns, to complete the dam and forebay of the lock which has been partially constructed by the Government at Lock No. 4 on the Coosa River, the work to be done under his supervision and control, and in accordance with the present adopted project and any modifications thereof that he may deem proper.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 25, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 24, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, the Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 37.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the point of order, I now call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum present has been made, and under that rule the doors will be closed and the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will, as their names are called, answer "aye;" as many as are opposed will answer "no;" those not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 223, nays 21, answered "present" 19, not voting 118, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19264—the diplomatic and consular apropriation bill—with Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNE]. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire, with the indulgence of the committee, to submit to the House, and incidentally to the country, some considerations why, in my opinion, the Republican party ought to be driven from power, and why the Democratic party should be intrusted with the control of the National Government. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] This country, sir, is under a government of parties. Any system of free government is necessarily a party government, because such a government, as has been said, is a government of opinion; and in order that any given opinion shall find expression in legislation and administration it must first commend itself to the judgment, and receive the support, of a majority of those who are entitled to express opinion at the polls. This procedure necessarily implies organization; it implies an appeal to the reason and the conscience of the citizen.

Here, sir, I pause a moment to comment upon a very curious anomaly in our politics. Nothing is more common in the flippant speech of party enthusiasm than attacks upon men who, for one reason or another, have changed their political affiliations. And yet the entire practical conduct of our partisan politics is based upon the theory that citizens may be induced to change their partisan associations; that it is not only advisable for them occasionally to do so, but is in the highest degree meritorious and patriotic. The organization of campaign committees, the collection and disbursement of moneys, the printing and circulation of literature, the torch-light processions, and the eloquent appeals of orators, are all addressed to the judgment of the individual citizen, and in the name of the welfare of the country.

I have had, sir, some special experience in this connection that I should not call to the attention of the House but for the fact that from time to time it has been made the subject of more or less pointed, and now and then humorous, reference upon the other side of this chamber. For a moment I desire particularly to advert to a speech which you will find in the RECORD of the 28th of April, by the distinguished humorist and chosen protectionist champion from the State of Washington—Mr. CUSHMAN. That gentleman declared himself in that speech to be a warm personal friend of mine. I am happy to state that I thoroughly reciprocate his disposition. I may add also that I do not take his humor any too seriously. It was expected of him, and he did the best within his power to rise to the expectation of those who had put him forward as the funny champion of a desperate cause. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The immediate occasion of his reference to myself was the fact of my having rendered, and very gladly rendered, some assistance to the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. WILLIAMS] in the course of his address on the subject of the tariff. Mr. WILLIAMS, owing to a slight physical indisposition, requested me to read for him certain excerpts from various authorities with which he desired to enforce and illustrate his argument. Referring to this circumstance, the gentleman from Washington said:

> I was particularly interested to note that the distinguished gentleman, formerly from Minnesota and now a Member from New York [Mr. TOWNE], was called upon to read these extracts. This hydra-headed performance seemed all the more remarkable to me when I recalled the fact that only a few years ago that same gentleman [Mr. TOWNE] occupied a seat on this, the Republican, side of this House and was one of the ardent champions of a protective tariff. And when he bade farewell to the Republican party he announced that he only did so on the single issue of money.

For a moment I shall pause at this point in the gentleman's speech and address myself very briefly to the campaign of 1896, to which reference has been made both in the speech to which I am now calling the attention of the House, and in the brilliant address of the eloquent gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] on yesterday. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the immediate occasion of my departure from the Republican party was the action of that party upon the subject of bimetallism. It is, however, due to the truth and the philosophy of history, as well as to a vindication of my own conduct, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the position of the Republican party on the money question was only a specific evidence of its generic abandonment of the cause of the people in every particular. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] There is not one single important proposition recognized to-day as a crucial Republican doctrine that is not in direct conflict with the teaching of that party on the same subject during its heroic days. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] It is true that I left that party because of its action on the money question; but if I had not left it then I should have had occasion fifty times to leave it since. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] It is, I think, proper also that I should remind the House that I did not quit the Republican party in order to get an office, but that I laid down an office when I left the party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I was a member of this House from a Republican district, with nearly 10,000 Republican majority at my back, and if I had chosen to take the prescription made for me, and to obey the dictation of the leaders of that party, I could have continued to be a member of this House from the State of Minnesota, and a Republican of good standing, for fifty years. [Applause.]

At the risk of spending somewhat too much time on a matter now chiefly historic and academic, I wish to refresh the memories of members of this House in regard to certain features of that great campaign of 1896. While listening to the address of the whirlwind orator from the Wabash [Mr. LANDIS] on yesterday, I was amazed to find how dense was the ignorance that still remained in an exceptionally brilliant Republican intellect upon the subject of the coinage, at a distance of ten years from that campaign of education. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In answer to an interruption by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOCKS], referring in general words to the position of the Democratic party in that campaign, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] declared that in that campaign the Democratic party stood for the silver standard and against the gold standard; and when his attention was directed to the declarations on the subject of bimetallism in various Republican platforms, he displayed an emphatic antipathy to interruption and made no satisfactory reply to his interrogator. The proposition of the Democratic party in 1896, of which, sir, with others, I was a somewhat strenuous supporter, was not to establish the silver standard but to restore silver to equal power and dignity with gold as a money metal. The proposition was not a novel one. It had been the historic and settled policy of every political party in this country for many years preceding that campaign. When, with many others in the Republican party, I contended, in 1896, that the money function should be restored to silver on a parity with gold, I was in exact accord with the national platform of my party on that subject. In this connection I read another sentence from the brilliant speech of the humorous gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN]. After paying to my voice a compliment which modesty will not let me accept, and which courtesy to the gentleman will not alow me to refuse [laughter], he said:

And the only conclusion I could come to was that the use of one single voice in speaking for all political parties and on all sides of all questions has tended to cultivate the gentleman's voice to a point of perfection that the more modest of us can never hope to attain.

This observation, it is recorded by the official stenographer, was followed by "great laughter" on the Republican side of the House. What they laughed at Heaven only knows; but it would be futile to seek a reason for many of the risible manifestations of satisfaction on that side of the Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Earlier in these remarks I made the proposition that political party organization implies the right and the duty upon the part of an honest man now and then to change his party allegiance. This change may be due to increased reflection, to better information, or to the development of new issues upon which not the same opinions are entertained among men who have been of the same persuasion in regard to questions previously at stake. I do not consider it at all an impugnment of an honest man's character that he should change his party allegiance, but rather a vindication thereof. Every man should seek, to the limit of his capacity, to have a correct opinion. He is entitled to any opinion at all only upon that condition. But he should always have the courage of his conclusions; and if new facts, or more mature consideration lead him to change his judgment, it is not only not an occasion of reproach, but it is one of commendation. Nevertheless, sir, I wish to say that in regard to every great political principle I ever avowed or felt I stand to-day exactly where I stood when I avowed and felt it. I was born back in the historic days of the Republican party. My infancy was nurtured under the benign influences of its most heroic leadership. My earliest recollections are of the friends and companions of the immortal Abraham Lincoln, whose broad general beliefs and sympathies were more nearly akin than those of any other great statesman of our history to the beliefs and sympathies of the illustrious founder of the Democratic party, Thomas Jefferson. [Applause on the Democratic side.] These sir, I inherited. They inspired my youth. I grew to manhood cherishing them. I entertain them to-day, but I had to get out of the Republican party in order to entertain and avow them honestly. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], or any other gentleman on that side of the House, and I hope the gentleman from Washington will forgive me for taking him seriously in this one matter, really means to insinuate that anywhere or at any time I have espoused and advocated, upon any great political question, a side opposed to that which I have anywhere else or at any other time espoused and advocated, I desire him here and now to tell me and this House where and when it was and what the subject was. [Turning to the Republican side.] If any of you claim to know, let me know, and if you do not know, do not say you know. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me call attention to this paragraph in the Republican national platform of 1888:

The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I read further from the corresponding plank in the Republican national platform of 1892:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetallism and demand the use of both gold and silver as standard money.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Those utterances, sir, embody the doctrine which I advocated in 1896, both before the meeting of the national Republican convention and afterwards during that most interesting campaign. But that is the doctrine which the Republican party denounced in its platform of 1896, and strenuously opposed in the campaign of that year. Let me now ask the gentleman from Washington, who has been talking on two sides of that question, the Republican party or the gentleman from New York? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I shall not for the moment argue the justice of the proposition; I am not now concerned with the merits; I seek at present merely to place absolutely beyond all cavil or denial the fact that the Republican party did change its position on that fundamental monetary question. But, you may say, may not a party, like an individual, change its opinions? And I answer frankly, "Yes; to be sure; but that the change of the party is not obligatory upon one single member of it who remains in his own judgment of the same opinion as before." So far as I am concerned, my opinions are free, and they are my own, and I shall always go where I can advocate them without restraint in the hope of giving them most effect in behalf of my country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, sir, briefly, what was the contention in the campaign of 1896? I desire frankly to admit, so far as I am concerned, that the Democratic party made a serious tactical error in the enunciation of its position on the coinage question. It was, in my opinion, a mistake to put into the platform a declaration in favor of the ratio of 16 to 1, or, indeed, of any other ratio whatever. When that declaration had once been made I, indeed, argued for it. I endeavored here upon this floor, as some of you will remember, perhaps, wearisomely, for some three or four hours, to establish that it is was a practicable proposition, although not a necessary one, for the realization of the principle and the practical benefits of bimetallism. We assumed an unnecessary burden in apparently identifying the principle of bimetallism with the incident of the ratio between the two metals. While I have always believed that the United States could have maintained the ratio of 16 to 1, I was perfectly willing, in order to secure a permanent par between gold and silver throughout the world, and a settlement of that vexatious question for fifty or a hundred years, to permit the ratio to be fixed at any compromise point within a considerable range, as, for example, at 22 to 1, which, in 1900, would have preserved the then existing commercial exchange between London and India.

In the latter year I urged strenuously that the declaration for the ratio of 16 to 1 be not included in the platform, contending that we should plant ourselves squarely upon a declaration of the quantitative theory, the generic principle of a corresponding increase of money with which to do business along with the increase of the business requiring to be done, and that we leave the ratio to the determination of statesmen under conditions as they might appear. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, the simple fact is that this proposition was predicated upon a principle of political economy, from which there never had been a dissenting voice among the political philosophers of the world in any language or in any country from the time of Aristotle down to 1896—the simple principle that you can not do more business with less money without lowering prices. We declared that we wished to reclothe silver with monetary dignity and capacity equivalent with gold, for the reason that for twenty-five years, with here and there a pause and eddy in the current, there had been a continued progressive fall of prices, a phenomenon which every economist that ever wrote with any authority has declared to be the same thing as the rise of the purchasing power of money, an increase in the value of the monetary substance. We saw no way to stop the fall of prices, except by increasing the quantity of the stuff in which prices were measured. What was your answer to this demand?

Now, I am anxious to nail you gentlemen on this proposition right here; and I wish my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY], who, as I understand it, is to follow me in this debate, would attend to this point and state whether or not I correctly represent the attitude that he and his party then took in regard to it. You declared to us that there was money enough; that you did not need any more; and the most of you, together with nearly all your great editorial writers, committed yourselves unreservedly to the contention that there is no discoverable relation between the quantity of money in circulation and the range of prices. In the calm of the present, far removed from the heat and excitement of that great campaign, it seems strange that you could possibly have committed yourselves to a theory so absolutely at war with common sense and universal experience. Yet, for the verity of the statement that you did so commit yourselves, I appeal to the whole body of literature contemporaneous with that campaign. The then President of the United States himself stated in a message to Congress that we did not need any more money; that the only thing necessary was an access of general confidence—praying for confidence at the precise time when there was nothing to have confidence in. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The only time when confidence was needed was exactly when there was a confession by those who called for it that there was nothing for it to rest on. But perhaps there has never been a greater exhibition of the irony of politics than that which followed the campaign of 1896. You gentlemen who succeeded in persuading the people that they did not need any more money, and declared so strenuously that you did not want any more, began shortly to witness, with commendable resignation, an unprecedented increase in its supply. It was the only thing that saved your party from absolute annihilation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I declare with the sanction of all the teachings of all the economists and of all the experience of the commercial world from the beginning of time, that the vastly augmented and continued increase in the world's stock of gold following the campaign of 1896, and continuing to this hour, has been the only thing that saved this country, the only thing that saved the civilized world, from the most gigantic financial cataclysm that history has recorded. [Applause on the Democratic side.] With the increased capitalization of our modern business contrivances, the multiplication of corporations, the vast development of the world's business, with the attendant unprecedented increase in liquid debts evidenced by securities of every conceivable sort held as investments all over the world; if you had continued to expand that overblown fabric of confidence, resting upon a constantly relatively diminishing basis of ultimate money, you would have wrecked the commercial institutions of mankind amid universal calamity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The increased production of gold saved you from yourselves. You were the beneficiaries of your own fatuous ignorance. The most of you did not then know what you wanted and do not now know what you got. [Applause from the Democratic side.] We declared that to stop the fall of prices it was necessary to have more ultimate or basic money. We could not see any place to get it except to coin again a metal which for four thousand years had been money, and which, whenever permitted free access to the mints along with gold, and an equal monetary function under the law, had maintained itself at a practical parity with the other metal. Now, my Republican friends, please remember that your answer to our contention for more ultimate money was, not that you were going to get it from an increased production of gold or from somewhere else except from the silver mines, but that you did not want to get it at all. You had money enough, you said. Now, therefore, let me in all candor inquire what business you have to compliment yourselves over the increased gold supply and the prosperity that came with it? And yet I have heard distinguished Republican orators claiming this augmented gold supply as among the assets of Republican statesmanship and of the McKinley administration, along with the sunshine and the rain, our unequaled productivity of soil and climate, our unparalleled mineral resources, the multifarious talents of the most enlightened and enterprising people the world ever saw. This phenomenon, my friends, saved your faces as well as your offices. The people, mistakenly in my judgment, at the time decided not to open the mint, but heaven decided to open the mines. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Providence was both wiser and kinder than you. From our point of view it made no difference whether this access of basic money came from one metal or the other, or from both, provided only that the total quantity clothed with full monetary power sufficed for the maintenance of a practical level of average prices; and I have never at any time or place said anything inconsistent with this proposition.

It is beside the point to quote, as if they convicted us of inconsistency, some of the statements made by men on this side as to the calamity that would follow the perpetuation of the gold standard; for everybody knows that these predictions were based upon what everybody on both sides of the question at that time contemplated—the assumption of a continued relative decline in the output of gold. Nobody could dip into the future and foretell the secrets of science that should render profitable hitherto unworkable deposits of gold, and nobody could see into the almost ilmitless treasures on the frozen banks of the Yukon or in the deep recesses of the Witwaters Rand. So great was the increase of gold production that my friend, who now does me the honor to attend to what I am saying, the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], who was a member of the House in those days, said upon a certain occasion that the gold coming to the mints of the United States during a few years succeeding the campaign of 1896 involved a greater addition in dollars to the basic money supply of the country than would have been realized if the gold supply had continued on its old plane before 1896 and we had supplemented it with the free coinage of silver. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I did not intend, sir, to spend so much time on this subject. It is now merely a part of the history of our politics. Certain references to myself in connection with it, however, seemed to me not only to justify but to require that I should say what I have said. In addition I desire merely to affirm my belief that in principle the Democratic party stands to-day on that great subject precisely where it stood in 1896. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now let me call particular attention to the fact that I have just said that the principle for which we contended then we contend for now. We are not now asking the free coinage of silver. We do not need the free coinage of silver at this time. The principle we contend for is merely this: That so far as the Government concerns itself with providing a monetary system for the country, it should endeavor to maintain such a system as shall be equitable between debtor and creditor. We want neither an appreciating money nor a depreciating money. A system that shall do exact justice is of course impossible. An approximation is the best that can be achieved. But it must be borne in mind that the principle of justice requires that the money of the country shall be, as nearly as the function of government can make it so, a just measure of the values of the things which are exchanged by means of it and of the debts and burdens expressed in terms of it; and that the Democratic party, if in control of the Government, will always employ its total powers within their constitutional limit, to produce this result. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Frankly, let me say, I expect never to see the coinage question raised again as it was presented in 1896. I have attempted to give some attention to the study of the production of gold, to its geology and location, and to its treatment; and my opinion is that the world's output of gold will, for an indefinite number of years, continue to increase not only absolutely but relatively; and it is altogether likely that if there is ever another contest in this country upon the coinage question it will be precipitated from your side by a proposition to restrict the coinage of gold. [Applause.] For, if this indicated increase in the production shall come to pass, it is reasonably certain that the great creditor class of the world will order you so to restrict the coinage, and if you are so ordered you will march up and do it if there are enough of you left to carry out the order. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this question has been settled by a decree to which all parties must bow. Under present conditions I, for one, am satisfied with it. The record of the Democratic party in regard to this question is consistent; but it is the duty of a party to be abreast of the practical issues of the present hour. As a matter of immediate practical concern it is relatively immaterial whether, upon a great question of the past, the attitude of the Democratic party was right or wrong. What is pertinent at this moment is, What are the live questions of this hour; where does the Republican party stand in regard to them, and what does the Democratic party propose to do about them? And this, sir, brings me to consider certain topics as to which the consistency of my position has been further challenged. After stating that I had claimed to leave the Republican party "on the single issue of money" the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] continued:

> And yet, after affiliating with that party and indorsing one political heresy, the gentleman seems to have let all holds go and embraced all their heresies, including free trade.

Waiving, for the present, the truth of this accusation, let me remark that if I had changed my opinions in regard to the great subject of the tariff I might plead in exculpation the precedent of some very illustrious examples. I hold in my hand a very interesting compilation, made by a competent and honest man, and, as to the extracts I shall read to you, verified by myself, containing certain of the expressions of alleged belief to which utterance has been given at divers times and places by the gentleman who is at the present moment the exalted Chief Magistrate of the United States. [Laughter and applause.] From this compilation I read a short extract taken from "Roosevelt's Life of Benton," at page 67 (of the first edition, I believe):

> Political economists have pretty generally agreed that protection is vicious in theory and harmful in practice; > but if the majority of the people in interest wish it, and it affects only themselves, there is no earthly reason why they should not be allowed to try the experiment to their hearts' content.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Applause.]

I next read from the same eminent authority a short extract from a speech delivered July 24, 1904, in acceptance of the Republican nomination for the Presidency:

> That whenever the need arises there should be a readjustment of the tariff schedules is undoubted, but such changes can with safety be made only by those whose devotion to the principle of a high protective tariff is beyond question, for otherwise the changes would amount not to a readjustment, but to repeal. The readjustment, when made, must maintain and not destroy the protective principle.

I refrain at present from continuing the "deadly parallel" in regard to other subjects from the same high source—it can be illustrated, I believe, with any subject to which he ever gave expression [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], including the railroad rate bill [renewed laughter and applause]—and will comment for a moment upon the great question upon which this comparison of views is cited. I think it was Edmund Burke who declared that he had for practical political purposes very little use for general maxims, and every public man's experience must, I think, have taught him the peril that lies in the generality and brevity of an epithet.

The words "protection" and "free trade," "protectionist" and "free trader" have been much misused. For myself I will not permit my beliefs to be misrepresented by the employment of them. My position on the great fiscal question to which the raising of duties upon imports has given so large an importance during our history was taken early, but after the most careful investigation I was then able to bestow upon it. While a student at the University of Michigan I pursued, under a very distinguished economist, one of the ablest in this country, Dr. Henry C. Adams, well known as the statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a course in advanced political economy. Of course, one of the principal subjects to which we gave our attention was that of protection versus free trade, and at the conclusion of our studies we were asked to write, respectively, upon a sheet of paper for the information of the professor the designation of our belief as to that great controversy. Every man in the class, with two exceptions, wrote himself down as a free trader. One other student, now a practicing lawyer in the city of Washington, and myself dissented from this preponderant judgment. We called ourselves neither "protectionists" nor "free traders," but "nationalists." By that designation, as I then conceived it and as I conceive it now, was indicated those who believe that it is the function of the closet philosopher, the theoretical political economist, to collect, examine, classify, and systematize the complicated data of economic science and to formulate and announce the abstract laws of wealth, of the acquisition, distribution, or exchange, and consumption of utilities calculated to meet human wants. It is, on the other hand, and this is a matter, as I view it, of great importance, the business of the statesman to take the abstract principles established by the political economist and apply them to the concrete conditions of his people in his day.

Aristotle gave expression to this idea when he said that the maker of laws must always have in mind two things, the people and the country. Now, sir, what tariff schedules shall be enforced at any one time in any one country and under any given conditions, and what shall be enforced at another time in another country under different conditions, can not be determined by any a priori formula in the world. It is a question of circumstances as they exist at the time and in the place when and where you are to apply the law to them. You can not make trade absolutely "free," either now or at any other time short of the millenium. There are always two ends to a bargain, and when the bargain is international there is one end of the trade your local law can not reach. Again, it will happen that legislation which at one time would be described as protective may perform the function of making trade more free, and it may happen at another time that laws enacted in the name of free trade may actually extend protection over the industries to which they apply. For example, when, just before the middle of the last century, Great Britain vastly lowered her tariff barriers and started out as the evangel of freer trade among the nations, she had, owing to the more rapid concentration of capital within her borders than had taken place elsewhere in the world, and to the relatively wide extension and development of the factory system with its machinery and its subdivision of labor, reached a stage of productive capacity far in advance of any other nation in the world. She had, as I remember to have seen it stated, with a population of some 20,000,000 of people, a productive capacity of 450,000,000 pairs of human hands.

The highest protection that under those conditions could be extended to her industry consisted in making more free the avenues and opportunities for exchanging its products. On the other hand, in the early history of the United States, when capital was almost nonexistent; when natural resources, though manifold and tremendous, were undeveloped; when population was scarce and industry undifferentiated; to have left trade nominally "free" would have been actually to subject it almost absolutely to the control of nations with more concentration of capital and more highly organized industries. Accordingly, legislation which "protected" those industries really "freed" them from harsh conditions and permitted them to grow.

The words "protection" and "free trade," as they are so generally and loosely used, are both, in my opinion, capable of infinite mischief. A man may very consistently be a protectionist at one time and a free-trader at another for the very sufficient reason that the same conditions of public policy and advantage may dictate one policy at one time and another at another. This is the reasonable and practical position of the national economist. A man who proclaims himself to be at all times and under all circumstances a protectionist, and the man also who proclaims himself as always a free-trader, both stulify themselves. When, for example, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] declared yesterday, "I am a high protectionist," he said in effect that he was not only for protection but for high protection once, next, and last, first, all the time, and forever. There is no ambiguity about that declaration. It may not be intelligent but it is intelligible. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

There has been, I regret to say, a somewhat similar carelessness in the use of language on the part of Democratic writers and speakers. They have not been so scrupulous about their terminology as the cunning and resourcefulness of their opponents should have admonished them to be. In stating their position against that kind of protection for which the Republican party now stands, they have permitted themselves too often to employ language which could be used, and which has been used, with much success by our opponents as ground for accusing us of a determination to level all the custom-houses with the ground, and, in case we came into power, to paralyze the industries of the country with a programme of change so radical as to amount to demolition. The people of the United States are not wedded to the kind of protection doctrine for which the Republican party now stands. They want that system reformed. They would long ago have committed its reformation to the Democratic party if you Republicans had not succeeded in persuading them that the Democrats meant not reform but destruction.

I desire, with some emphasis, if with propriety I may venture to do so, to warn some of my Democratic friends against the danger of loose and careless expressions on this great subject. The American people will never reform the tariff with the ax and the torch. You must see to it that they do not have reasonable cause to believe that to be your intention. There is not a real free-trader in the nation; or at least if there is, there isn't another one. The gentleman from Indiana attempts to raise a false issue when he represents the struggle as impending between theoretical protection on the one hand and theoretical free trade on the other.

This cry has frequently deceived the people in the past, but I think it is now a useless slogan. No responsible Democrat contends for free trade or for any approach to it as a measure for either immediate or proximate policy. The distinguished leader of the minority of this House [Mr. WILLIAMS] does not contend for it. The Southern people are not for it. Even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARKE], to whom in times past there has been wrongly imputed a certain strenuousness in the direction of theoretical free trade, declared in a speech in this House on the 8th of January:

> A reasonable revision of the exorbitant Dingley rates is a Democratic proposition, not Republican.

The apologists and eulogists of the present system will make a serious mistake if they think they can go before the American people in the coming Congressional campaign, and in the great contest of 1908, and ignore the abuses of that system whose knowledge is common property throughout the land. They can not distract the attention of the people from its hideous features by pointing to a bogey-man of their own creation, and crying hysterically, "Free trade!" "Free trade!" The issue, let it be constantly repeated and emphasized, is not between protection and free trade, it is between the perpetuation of the present exaggerated protection, which produces and fosters monopoly, on the one hand, and on the other hand a fair and just revision of the tariff schedules in the interest of the general welfare. The former is the Republican programme, the latter the Democratic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the present attitude of the Republican party on this great fiscal question is another illustration of the charge I made a few minutes ago that the Republican party had changed its position on substantially all its original characteristic doctrines. To most of you gentlemen on that side of the House the attitude of your party as a champion of protection for protection's sake seems quite fundamental; but your party did not begin with believing that. You have grown into it by a natural process of assimilation to those who have come to own you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In this connection I dislike to impair the force and destroy the novelty of the very eloquent address which is later in the day to be delivered by the distinguished champion of protection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], of whose speech scheduled for this afternoon a partial, and, I am sure, a very inadequate résumé, has already been printed, under some failure to connect, or rather an overscrupulousness to connect, in the Philadelphia Inquirer of this morning. [Laughter.] Now [taking up the paper], I am not going to read this speech to you. I want the gentleman to have all the novelty of effect in its delivery that his personal equation of advocacy can impart to it, especially as there is no novelty in the doctrine. The headlines are themselves interesting. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania did not write the headlines, but the man who did write them knew exactly what Dalzell would say. How did he know? Why, because he knew what ought to be said; because every Republican in Pennsylvania always knows what ought to be said on this subject, because they have been saying the same thing for the last sixty years up in Pennsylvania. It is simply impossible for them to learn that the country is getting tired of this exaggerated Pennsylvania way of looking at things. The headlines begin by stating in big type, "Dalzell rakes the revisionists." [Laughter.]

I may remark in passing that, curiously enough, since rakes are a specialty of recent Republican information, they do not specify the kind of rake he uses. "Opposes changes to humor importers." There is an ambiguity here which the gentleman ought to correct. It leaves uncertain whether he opposes changes in order to humor the importers or whether he opposes changes that are designed to humor the importers. That certainly was a bad break by the headline writer. "Opposes changes to humor importers and a lean party thirst for power." It is rather odd, Mr. Chairman, that long exclusion from power, making a party thirsty, should for that reason necessarily taint every principle advocated by the party so excluded; but it seems to me far more doubtful that long possession of power, absolute plethora of the good things of place, and an overfed satiety should still leave an especial mental acuteness for the consideration of these great problems. [Laughter.] I proceed with the headlines: "Pennsylvanian says tariff lessons have been learned amid the noise of industrial activity." Merely a new paraphrase of the oft-repeated complacency with which the Republican party takes credit even for the beneficences of Providence.

But what I wish particularly to call to your attention in this eloquent speech of yesterday, to which you will presently listen, is the following from the peroration: "Incidental protection, a humbug and pretense, an insult to all reason and logic." I desire, in immediate contrast with this statement of the foremost champion of present-day Republican protectionism on this floor, to read from the first Republican national platform in which this subject was ever mentioned, that of 1860, what the doctrine of that party on the subject of protection was proclaimed to be before they had subordinated themselves to the instrumentalities that grew up in consequence of the abuses of it. I read from paragraph 12 of that platform:

> That while providing revenue for the support of the General Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imports as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country.

Incidental protection was never better defined than in that very statement of it; and, sir, it illustrates the extent to which the Republican party has departed from its early faith, when one of the most brilliant exponents and defenders, one of the most honored champions, of the present-day creed of that organization now declares the original statement of the party belief on that subject to be a humbug and pretense, an insult to all reason and logic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, this recalcitrancy of the Republican party has extended to every single thing that it ever stood for. We have already seen how it abandoned its position on bimetallism in 1896 and subsequently; and I have just exhibited how its original doctrine on the tariff question, that of incidental protection, has grown into the huge practice of protection for protection's sake. It was the early boast of the Republican party that it had met a great exigency in the national life by the invention of the greenback, whereby the very existence of the Government was preserved. But the party long since turned its back upon the conception of Government money, as it has done upon every other one of its original tenets, and is to-day the advocate of the banker's system of finance pure and simple. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Upon the subject of reciprocity there has been a similar change of base. The great apostle of modern-day Republicanism, the late lamented President McKinley, in the last speech that ever fell from his lips, said at Buffalo, September 5, 1901:

> The period of exclusiveness has passed. The expansion of our trade and commerce is our present problem. * * * Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not. If, perchance, some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue, or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to expand and promote our markets abroad?

This policy, thus advocated by McKinley, indorsed by the present Chief Executive time and again; ratified by the solemn pronouncements of several Republican national conventions, is to-day repudiated and flouted by the leadership of a party apparently as deaf to the appeals of the people as it is unmindful of the solemn pledges of its conventions.

These changes of position by the Republican party on specific questions are only indicative of the altered spirit that controls the organization. The party that was born in a great outburst of national devotion to the rights of man and the cause of human liberty, whose earliest platforms were full of the Declaration of Independence and the spirit of 1776, has become the champion of a policy that negatives these original American principles. Nothing could be more opposed to the doctrine which inspired the revolution of our fathers against the colonial system of Great Britain than the new policy of the Republican party, which has burdened our democratical institutions with dependencies and colonies and brought millions of men beneath our power who are excluded from the exercise of our liberties.

On every side we witness indications of the complete domination of the Republican party by special privilege which, in return for opportunities of preying upon the people, pours into the coffers of that organization campaign funds of colossal proportions which are used for the perpetuation of this partnership between interests and politics by the most skillful organization known to the history of free government.

Sir, I listened yesterday with much interest to that long array of phenomena cited by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] in his endeavor to show that the only prosperity this country has ever enjoyed was under Republican tariff legislation, and in consequence of this legislation, and that the only disasters that have ever come upon the country have happened under Democratic tariff laws, and in consequence thereof. He did, indeed, under compulsion, somewhat modify this last statement, alleging that in certain cases the disaster had anticipated its cause and had been produced by the general fear that it would happen. Now, sir, we are all familiar with this old, old story. I greatly enjoyed the gentleman's recitation of the many splendid things that to-day exemplify the prosperity and glory of the United States of America and its people. I will not allow that gentleman, or any other gentleman, to go beyond me in paying tribute to the unequaled capacities of the American citizen or to the magnificent productivity and wealth in soil and mine and forest and climate of that splendid habitat wherein it has pleased God to plant this people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

He can be no more proud than I am of that impressive catalogue of national wealth, national prestige, and national achievement. But, sir, I am one of those who believe that the chief factors in the production of this unprecedented result are not the tariff schedules of the Republican party, but rather those causes, some of which I have cited, that have never before met in such number and measure in the conditions of any other civilization the world ever saw. We have a territory of greater contiguous extent for purposes of habitation and cultivation, subject to one system of laws and to freedom of exchange among more people of homogeneous circumstances, than history has ever known before. [Applause.] We have a citizenship whose conjoined talents and capacities represent the best development of the most enterprising races on the earth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have time in which to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have time to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNE. I thank the committee. In addition, sir, to these unequaled sources of natural wealth, and to this unprecedented capacity upon the part of the inhabitants of such a country to develop and make use of these resources, we have in a system of laws, our Constitution and institutions of government that liberate to the fullest possible extent the genius, the physical and mental power of the individual, a factor perhaps greater than any of the others enumerated. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Those things it ought to be the chief glory of every American citizen to recognize and glorify as the foundation of the splendid prosperity of his country. It shows a poor conception of those great characteristic and fundamental principles to attempt to narrow into the slender margin of a tariff schedule the cause and explanation of these immeasurable results. But it has long been the fashion of Republican orators to recite pages of statistical opulence and chapters of frenzied rhetoric in rhapsodic praise of the Republican party. They have not deemed it necessary to show causal connection between premise and conclusion. It has seemed to them enough to say: "This is the greatest country on earth! We are richer and more powerful than anybody! Hurrah for the Grand Old Party!"

By dint of constant reiteration these glib and tumid assertions are by and by accepted for sober fact. After a while their very age makes them venerable, respectable, authoritative. They become, indeed, hereditary. They are a kind of rhetorical covenant that runs with the party faith. Many a man upon the other side of this Chamber who is to-day a great Republican orator peddles these things merely because his father peddled them. He believed them originally on account of their honorable tradition, and, never having examined them since, he believes them now. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] But of course they never were true, and they are not true now. It is indeed inexplicable that when the refutation of these assertions lies so ready to the hand of any honest inquirer there should endure such hardihood of repetition. Suppose, for example, you take the accepted statistics published by this Government, covering the decade between 1850 and 1860, when the country was under the operation of the Democratic tariff of 1846. You will find by the records that in population in wealth, in manufactures, in farm values, in railroad mileage, and, indeed, in every other particular commonly relied upon as statistical evidence of national wealth and progress, there was a much greater percentage of increase than in respect to the same items during any other ten years of the history of this nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If that statement is not true some gentleman following me in this debate can easily correct it. I am not now, let me caution the House, engaged in any careful effort to build up a statistical reply to this smug and complacent Republican doctrine of tariff-made prosperity, although it would be easy to become tedious with figures carrying such a lesson, but I am merely concerned to show in passing that this huge Republican assumption of universal prosperity under Republican rule and universal disaster under Democratic rule is an absurd and silly humbug, unsupported by the facts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] says that there are problems of prosperity and problems of adversity; that we have problems from Republican prosperity and problems from Democratic adversity. That our adversity problems are due to the Democratic party I deny, and I have briefly indicated the folly of that contention. That we have problems, and serious problems, due to prosperity, and prosperity coincident oftentimes with Republican administration, I admit; I admit that those problems have recently increased in number and in portent, and I go further and charge that up to this hour the Republican party has displayed neither disposition nor capacity to solve those problems. The gentleman will, I think, find that he has used an almost fatally suggestive phrase when he coined his expression for Democratic arraignment on the stump in Indiana in the coming campaign. "Sweet are the uses of adversity," the great bard has said; and that illustrious man, the first Republican, Abraham Lincoln, declared that the people of the United States know the tendency of prosperity to breed tyrants. Yes, the problems of prosperity, my friends, are indeed the problems of this hour. They are the most difficult, the most devious, the most elusive, the most dangerous problems that any people in the world can face. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It has been said of the individual that prosperity is a greater moral test than adversity. Many a man gets along very well under narrow and unpropitious circumstances, compelled, by the very necessity of labor, to keep from indulging in errant ways the superabundant elasticity of his mind and body. But the man who is rich and does not need to worry is the man who is in danger from the lurking devil of temptation. [Applause.] And it is likewise with nations and civilizations. One absolute story has been written since the beginning of time. It was not foreign conquest that overwhelmed the states of ancient Greece; it was not external barbaric strength that crushed the Roman Empire like an egg shell. It was the dry rot of social and political corruption that destroyed the glory of Athens. It was the same inevitable disease that undermined the world-wide power of Rome. [Applause.] So long, sir, as the eagles of that imperial Republic, in their triumphant march northward to the German forests, southward to the sands of Africa, eastward beyond the Euphrates, and westward to the coast of Britain, were borne by men who were free the legions were invincible. It was only when her standards were feebly clasped in the nerveless hands of mercenary troops and industrial slaves that Rome tottered before the on-rush from the fastnesses of the North. [Applause.]

Sir, the people of the United States when but three millions strong, scattered along the fringe of the Atlantic coast, were able to vindicate their right to liberty and self-government against the most powerful nation the world had ever seen ranged in war. Afterward, in the most awful fratricidal conflict ever necessitated by the evolution of any civilization, two sections of our common country fought out the survival of the idea of nationality in a struggle never surpassed in heroism and courage. As long as we remain politically free, industrially just, and socially pure we shall continue to be as secure against any assault from without, even by the leagued powers of the world, as we have been heretofore, against all enemies in the field. [Applause.] And if, which God forefend, the time should ever come that the standard of the Republic, full high advanced, should find itself no longer sustained by the hand of a freeman, but quivering in the uncertain grasp of an industrial serf and about to fall into the dust degraded, dishonored, and irrecoverable, it would be because the people of the United States had met these crucial problems of prosperity and, like every preceding civilization, had not been able to solve them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But these abandonments of ancient doctrines by the Republican party, to which I have called attention, exhibit nothing wonderful or exceptional. It is the most natural thing in the world that any political party in control of the institutions of any free people should ultimately come to represent and obey the dominant economic influences of the time. It is always the instinct and policy of the interests at any given moment imparting direction to the economic progress of a people to control the laws by which industrial conditions are modified. This inevitably leads to an attempt, usually successful, to dominate the political organization which for the time being is in command of the machinery of the Government. It is a phenomenon repeated over and over again in the history of free governments. A party, in consequence of some great spasm of public virtue, some splendid sentiment of reform, comes into power representing at the moment the best impulses and highest purposes of the people; but, like Thackeray's maiden who went on cutting bread and butter, the people, after such self-assertion, are apt to return to their daily occupations. Having saved the country they think their duty is done. But the truth is that the country is never so much in danger as just after it has been saved; for then the selfish interests of society, always vigilant, take advantage of the inattention of the people to get into their own hands the strings that control the operation of the Government.

Thus, by a natural and almost inappreciable process, a party which comes into power as a radical party remains in power as a conservative party. It becomes "subdued to what it works in, like the dyer's hand." The party is then maintained in power, chiefly by two forces: First, the subtle management, the powerful business influences, and the limitless corrupt resources of the representatives of the interests that have secured control of the organization; and, secondly, by the amiable folly of those honest and well-meaning citizens who vote for a present wrong under the inspiration of the memory of an ancient glory. This process of transition from radicalism to conservatism never had a better illustration than the history of the Republican party. Hundreds of thousands of its voters to-day sincerely think that they are honoring the memory of Abraham Lincoln by voting the dictates of corrupt and grasping monopoly. And, sir, the people of this country are coming to realize that the economic forces of this era are solidifying and extending their power at the expense of the general welfare, by means of either the warrant or the permission of inequitable laws, and are masters of, and partners with, the leadership of the Republican party. [Applause.]

One of the results of this realization is a demand for a revision of the tariff that is finding a growing and widening expression in all sections of this country. The gentleman from Indiana who has spoken, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who will speak, together with all the Republican apologists for the so-called stand-pat programme, declare that there is no such demand. Sir, they are compelled so to declare in order to justify themselves in making no effort to correct the evils complained of. They find themselves under the necessity of ignoring this popular outcry, even though it should be so loud as to split their ears. Those of us not under the same necessity of self-stultification as they are know full well the extent and nature of this dissatisfaction. Indeed, if a private inquest of judgment could be had, I should willingly leave the question of its existence to the knowledge of the average member of either side of this Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why doth she protest so much? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Indiana says that the country knows the situation better than "the other side of this Chamber," and, standing on this side, I give him back his words and say that I, too, believe that the country does understand the situation better than the "other side" of this Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why, sir, it is not possible that those gentlemen have not heard from New England. To be sure, the eloquent gentleman admits that they are "whining about it" in Massachusetts; but he will find, if I am not very much mistaken, that the elaborate formulation of objections to the iniquities of the present tariff as applied to the interests of New England, which has been repeatedly made by some of the strongest and ablest men of that old Commonwealth, will eventuate in some exhibition vastly more interesting to the Republican party than "whining." [Applause on the Democratic side.] If [turning toward Mr. LANDIS] you will be, as you say, satisfied to read upon the stump in Indiana the quotation you cited yesterday from a speech by the distinguished leader of this side of the House, we shall be very glad to give you a Roland for your Oliver, and tell the people of Massachusetts how contemptuously the leadership of your party refers to their dignified and earnest protest. Aye, and we shall be in Indiana, too, hundreds of us, not fearing to tell the people of your State that the issue is between monopoly and justice.

Have the gentlemen on the other side of the House heard from Minnesota? Have they heard from Iowa? [Applause.] The only theory upon which I can comprehend their apparent belief that the Republicans are all right in Iowa is that they hope to succeed in driving Cummins into the Democratic party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Keep on; and after you get rid of all the Republicans who want tariff revision, you may be calm and serene in Iowa, but you will find yourselves almightily in the minority. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You show little evidences, moreover, that you know of the existence of a Reciprocity League in this country; but I warn you that that league is a very lively proposition. They are issuing a great quantity of literature that is proving "mighty interesting reading" to the people of this country. One of the principal officers in that virile and purposeful organization, ex-United States Senator Harris, is a candidate on the Democratic ticket for governor of Kansas, and indications are that the Republican stand-patters in that State are in a condition bordering on panic. I do not think, my Republican friends, it is necessary at this moment to ask whether or not there is a large sentiment in the country for tariff revision. You may deny it; I affirm it. Nobody in the world will ever know exactly how much of it there is until it expresses itself at the polls, and for that verdict we, on this side, are quite content to wait. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Indiana says that as to the problems of adversity, whose heavy responsibility he charges upon the Democratic party, the evidence was furnished by that party between 1893 and 1897. This, of course, is the familiar refrain that is always introduced into Republican performances on this subject. I do not like to refer to this statement as a calumny, for that would imply that it is a conscious affirmation of what is not true, and I wish to be not only parliamentary but perfectly respectful and gentlemanly in this argument. I entertain no particle of malice against a single man on the other side of this Chamber. Many of them are my personal friends. Of a great number of them I entertain the highest opinion. I listened to the speech of the gentleman from Indiana yesterday, as a friend, with the greatest admiration. He possesses both the physical qualifications of an effective parliamentary orator and the mental equipment also; but he reminded me, to use a simile of ancient and honorable lineage, of a strong man in a morass, for the harder he struggled the deeper he sank in the mazes of his own confusion.

The Republican campaign text-book, pursuing the same course as the gentleman from Indiana, confines its citation of evidence against the Democratic party to the period between 1893 and 1897. Why? Because Cleveland came in on March 4, 1893, and they did not care to include any evidence of "adversity" before that date and under the preceding Republican administration. Now, I propose to supply to some extent this interesting deficiency.

The McKinley law became effective on the 9th of October, 1890. Here are some facts of record in the commercial history of that period. On November 11, one month and two days after the McKinley law went into effect, the New York Clearing House Association voted its certificates to banks in its association, admitted to be in dire distress. Six days later, November 17, 1890, the Boston clearing house did the same thing. On the same day the great banking house of Barker Brothers in Philadelphia failed for $5,000,000. In the same city, two days thereafter, there was a run on the Citizens' Savings Bank, and a receiver was appointed for the North River Bank. On November 22, 1890, the United Rolling Stock Company of Chicago made an assignment for $6,851,000.

This, remember, was late in the fall of 1890, the month following the enactment of the McKinley law, when, according to Republican contention on this floor yesterday, the farmers of Kansas were getting rich selling their corn, and when there was universal prosperity, because the McKinley bill was in operation and nobody was yet afraid of the Wilson bill, which was some four years in the future. On November 28, 1890, B. J. Jamison & Co., of Philadelphia, failed for two millions. On December 6 the Oliver Iron and Steel Mills, of Pittsburg, closed down, throwing 2,000 workmen out of employment. On the same day Myer & Co., of New Orleans, failed with liabilities of two millions. On January 3, 1891, the Scottsdale Rolling Mills and Pipe Works and the Charlotte Furnace and Coke Company, of Philadelphia, went to the wall, throwing out 10,000 workmen. On the 18th of January, 1891, the American National Bank, of Kansas City, shut its doors, with liabilities of two and a quarter millions of dollars. On the 8th of May, 1891, the Spring Garden National Bank and the Pennsylvania Safe Deposit and Trust Company, of Philadelphia, closed their doors. In 1892, in the fall before the elections, there occurred in the State of Pennsylvania the Homestead strike, which wrote one of the most awful chapters in the industrial experience of the world. The facts I have mentioned are merely illustrative. They by no means constitute a complete catalogue of their kind. Thousands of similar histories were written in those dark days. Cleveland came into office on the 4th of March, 1893, and when, under the impulse already attained, there had been two considerable failures, those of S. E. White & Co., of New York, and the Commercial Bank, of Chicago, and its branches, there began in May, 1893, those raids upon the national banks which added to the industrial calamity experienced from 1890 to 1893 under the Republican tariff law by creating a monetary panic due to a conspiracy among the bankers to force the repeal of the Sherman silver-purchase law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCLEARY. Will it interrupt my friend for me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNE. Not seriously.

Mr. McCLEARY. My question is this: My friend has cited certain things that happened, and he is too honorable a man to assert what is not true, and therefore I shall not attempt to deny the facts; but I want to ask him this question: Those all occurred in the winter of 1890 and 1891, did they not?

Mr. TOWNE. Oh, no; the gentleman should make his premise right.

Mr. McCLEARY. You say the bill was passed in October, 1890?

Mr. TOWNE. Yes; and the first calamity date is November 11, 1890, and the last I cited is in May, 1893.

Mr. McCLEARY. I am taking now the ones you first gave.

Mr. TOWNE. Select them at your convenience.

Mr. McCLEARY. I am taking the initiation of this matter. Can my friend tell me what was the result of the election of 1890 in this House?

Mr. TOWNE. The gentleman remembers it very well; what was it?

Mr. McCLEARY. About three-fourths of these seats were occupied by Democrats. Let me ask another question: Does my friend know one exception in the history of our country when the mid-term election did not forecast the coming Presidential election?

Mr. TOWNE. The gentleman may extract any comfort he may find in his formula. I am perfectly willing to allow final judgment to await the election of the Members of the Sixtieth Congress. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCLEARY. We accept the gage of battle.

Mr. TOWNE. That is right; I want to see a clean-cut fight.

Mr. McCLEARY. You will get one.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TOWNE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will just call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the strike at Homestead was not caused by any industrial depression in the country, but it occurred through the recognition, or the attempted recognition, of the Amalgamated Association. Industrial conditions had nothing whatever to do with that great strike.

Mr. TOWNE. I suppose, sir, that the gentleman indorses the proposition that used to be made during the silver debates by the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who held, if I remember correctly, that strikes and lockouts are evidences of universal prosperity.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TOWNE. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Did we have very many of them in 1893 and 1894 when there was nothing to divide?

Mr. TOWNE. Oh, we may not have had so many, but a few will do when they are big enough.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may resume, there are two or three further matters in this connection to which I desire to refer, but before doing so I wish to call the attention of my former colleague from Minnesota, who interrupted me shortly ago, to the fact that he is very welcome to any result he may be able to deduce from the point he attempted to make with regard to the dates of the various occurrences to which I have referred. My immediate purpose was to show by citation of individual facts having their location in every section of this country and in every important city, that the threadbare and customary allegation of calamity as universally characteristic of Democratic rule, and of prosperity, as always attendant upon Republican ascendency, is absolutely without foundation. I desire to give the coup de grace to this foolish and silly pretense.

The Republican party returned to power on the 4th of March, 1889. In the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Indiana yesterday, referring to the alleged business incapacity of the Democratic party and of Democrats individually, he instanced, if I remember correctly, the state of the Treasury during the Democratic administration of Mr. Cleveland. In that connection let me refer the gentleman to a few facts, and I hope the gentlemen who are to follow me in this debate may take time to wrestle with these facts. When Mr. Harrison took office in March, 1889, there was a surplus in the national treasury of $330,384,916.09, left over by the Democratic administration, which had also paid off more than one-third of a billion of dollars of the national obligations. Now, when Mr. Cleveland came in the second time, after the administration of Harrison and after the enactment of the McKinley law, that surplus had disappeared, and appropriations had already been made exceeding the revenues of the Government by $90,000,000 by the end of the first fiscal year. The enormous surplus had disappeared, a tremendous deficit was in sight, and the Treasury was seriously embarrassed. Indeed, as ex-Secretary Foster has confessed, the plates were already prepared for the issuance of bonds by the national Republican Administration with which to meet this deficit.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I presume the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent a dead man?

Mr. TOWNE. Neither a dead man nor a living one.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Over and again, and within the last Congress, the written statement of ex-Secretary Foster has been filed here, stating that no engraving was ever made, and the further statement that at the close of his term there was $103,000,000 surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. TOWNE. Why, the official figures show what was left.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. TOWNE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have read the order that Secretary Charles Foster signed, and it was then, February 25, 1893, on file in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under the Treasury Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have a copy of it here. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. TOWNE. I shall be glad to yield if for any good purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has ample time.

Mr. TOWNE. What is the wish of the gentleman?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise for a good purpose. The order signed by Mr. Foster was at the request of the incoming Secretary [cries of "Oh!" on the Democratic side], Mr. Carlisle. He ordered the execution of the plates for the purpose of engraving Treasury certificates. Mr. Cleveland forbade that that be done and the order was withdrawn, no work of the kind was ever attempted, and that was the end of the transaction. The gentleman has stated that the order was made and I thought it was proper to call his attention to what was really done.

Mr. TOWNE. I am very glad that the gentleman admits the substance of my charge.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for just one statement?

Mr. TOWNE. Let us hear it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Cleveland, in a published article, stated that just before his incoming second Administration the Republican Administration negotiated the exchange of greenbacks with the banks for gold temporarily in order to tide over and leave some gold in the Treasury, otherwise that there would have been none there. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amount, I believe, was $6,500,000.

Mr. TOWNE. If the chair pleases, I am not so much concerned at this moment in determining this question with literal accuracy. I made the charge upon apparently good authority; and now, through the kindness of my distinguished and ever-vigilant friend, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BARTLETT], I am able to produce a copy of the original order to which I have referred. I understand there is no question as to its authenticity, but if there is, it may easily be inquired into further in this debate. Here is the order:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1895.

SIR: You are hereby authorized and directed to prepare designs for the 3 per cent bonds provided in a Senate amendment to the sundry civil bill now pending. The denominations which should first receive attention are $100 and $1,000 of the coupon bonds and $100, $1,000, and $10,000 of the registered bonds.

This authority is given in advance of the enactment, in view of pressing contingencies, and you are directed to hasten the preparation of the designs and plates in every possible manner.

I inclose a memorandum for your guidance in preparing the script for the body of the bond.

Respectfully, yours, CHARLES FOSTER, Secretary.

TO the CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Will the gentleman from Ohio deny the authenticity of that letter?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; it has been printed in——

Mr. TOWNE (interrupting). Does the gentleman deny the authenticity of the letter?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, certainly not; it has been read and printed in our RECORD a score of times, but it never went beyond that order and was withdrawn at the request of Mr. Carlisle himself.

Mr. TOWNE. I decline to yield further. There is no use in fighting when the foe is down. The point of the desperate extremity of the Harrison Administration is established, and not only that, but admitted, and it would be true if it were not admitted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is great satisfaction, sir, in the fact that the discussion of the tariff question which is now going on in this country has caused to emerge clearly into the open two admissions which absolutely must convict the Republican party in the judgment of the American people of legislative iniquities calling for the most condign punishment. It is abundantly clear that the exaggerated tariff schedules are responsible for a very considerable percentage of the monopoly and trust abuses of which the people complain. That these tariff barriers are unreasonably high, and that behind them are sheltered combinations which, without any fear from foreign competition, are enabled to regulate their own rapacity only by their judgment of how much can be wrung from the victims of the process, will not be seriously disputed.

Indeed, the entire admission is implicit in the now frankly acknowledged fact that tariff-protected manufacturers customarily sell in foreign markets at prices very greatly beneath those which are charged to the American consumer for the same products. The overwhelming evidence on this point which has been produced before the country, a great part of which will be found in the admirable speeches on the subject in the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], has completely destroyed all attempt at denial and has finally forced the advocates of the system to come out openly in its defense. The debate on the subject has been most interesting. Early in its course there appeared that veteran knight of parliamentary joust and tourney, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the scarred, grizzled, and undaunted champion of many a forlorn-hope assault upon the fortresses of uncomfortable fact. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He denied the existence of this custom of underselling, but when he clamored rhetorically for the proof of it, the proof was furnished him until he fairly choked on it. Next came the debonair gentleman from Illionis [Mr. BOUTELL], who vainly endeavored to lose the point in studied bucolic reminiscences and literary speculation. [Laughter and applause.]

When the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] came forth into the lists in support of every Republican thing in sight, he chose to ignore this particular proposition and to disport himself among the more congenial if not more relevant and seemly topics of boarding-house blasphemy and the wit of the hustings. But the time came when the matter had to be taken seriously; and so, finally, the distinguished Athenian from Ohio

[Mr. GROSVENOR] and the fearless orator from the Wabash [Mr. LANDIS] on yesterday, joining the theretofore lonely but intrepid Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, admitted the accusation, admitted it indeed somewhat boastfully, claiming, by a tortuous logic characteristic of their peculiar mental processes, to find in it one of the main supports, merits, and beneficences of the too-high-protection system. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

So, sir, it now appears beyond all controversy, through formal and record stipulation by responsible representatives of the Republican party, that it is the habit of the protected manufacturers of America to sell their products abroad at lower prices, and at very considerably lower prices, than those at which they sell the same products in American markets. [Applause on the Democratic side.] "Why," says the gentleman from Indiana, "yes, of course they sell abroad cheaper than they do at home. Why, that is business; and if you fellows over on the other side," meaning us Democrats, "knew anything about business you would know it was so." This procedure, the gentleman declares, is merely good ordinary business sense. My friends, undoubtedly it is "business;" and let me remind the country that nothing better illustrates the extent to which the Republican party is subordinated to the selfish interests of to-day than its instant readiness, at the dictation of its business owners, to put the label of "business" upon every political faith it professes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Oh, yes, it is undoubtedly "business" for the manufacturers; but in God's name what kind of "business" is it for the American people? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that on this side of the chamber we may not know "business" in the accepted Republican sense very thoroughly, but I believe we do know the people of the United States, and that they will recognize that in that kind of business their welfare has been neglected and betrayed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman cites the case of a hot-water heating plant, if I remember correctly, made up in Iowa, and furnished at the price of $125, which the manufacturer told Mr. LANDIS he would be willing to duplicate for Mr. LANDIS's home in Indiana for $100; and the gentleman from Indiana adds that the man who was paying $125 for his plant stood by and heard the $100 proposition. Not only that, but he is said to have applauded it. He was delighted, said the gentleman from Indiana, to pay $125 for his plant and to let Mr. LANDIS pay $100 for one precisely like it, because that procedure would start the Iowa heating-plant man's business down in Indiana. I do not doubt that such an isolated instance occurred; but I venture the statement that if the man engaged in manufacturing hot-water heating plants in an Iowa village should undertake to make a business of charging his neighbors 25 per cent more than he charged his customers in Indiana, he would come to a very sudden realization that their satisfaction with the process was short-lived. Let it not be forgotten that in this very grave matter we are not dealing with an isolated sale for the purpose of getting entrance to a foreign market, but with a constant, regular business custom, which is admitted, avowed, advocated, and eulogized. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I say to you, gentlemen on the Republican side of this House, all we want in this campaign is that you shall be as frank on every stump as Mr. LANDIS says he will be in Indiana. Go out before the country and admit that the custom among your protected manufacturers, who do not need the degree of protection they are receiving, and in whom that excessive protection incites the practice of monopoly, to sell at much lower prices abroad than at home, and the electors of this country in the coming Congressional campaign will visit upon your heads a reprobation that you will not forget until you shall have lost the Presidential campaign of 1908. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Sir, my friend from Indiana, a most eloquent and interesting speaker, indulged himself in another panegyric on this lauded "business" custom, in a long series of rhythmic periodicity which, if not very convincing as an argument, was decidedly effective as rhetoric. He permitted himself to grow enthusiastic and eloquent over the fact that the great railroad train which runs from Moscow to Manchuria, across the vast plains, through the mountains, and over the steppes of the Russian Empire, is hauled by a locomotive manufactured in America.

"Was it bought cheaper than it could have been bought at home?" He exclaims (I quote him from memory):

> I know not, and I do not care. It is enough for me to know that that locomotive was made in the United States of America and carries the fame of the enterprise of my country beyond the confines of Asia.

He then described that other locomotive which hauls, at 60 miles an hour, the famous flyer from Tokio across Japan. That, too, it seems, was made in America. Again he exclaims:

> Was it bought cheaper abroad than it could have been bought at home? I do not know, and I do not care. It is enough for me to know that it was made in America, etc., etc., etc.

The gentleman, indeed, was so far gone in his rhapsody that, with magnificent optimism, as he gazed at the stars and clenched his fist, he declared that it was enough for him to know that even if the manufacturers had given their locomotives and machines away the operation had opened a market in foreign countries for American goods. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not permit my friend from Indiana to exceed me in the admiration he justly pays to the ingenuity, the enterprise, the commercial fortitude, and ability that have won so many triumphs for American genius in contributing to the development of the prosperity of less happy men in other parts of the world.

But I say that these conquests of American skill are possible consistently with the preservation of the interests of our own people; and let me tell the gentleman that if once the citizens of this country grasp the fact in a realizing sense that the foreigner who purchases a locomotive at a cheaper price than the American can buy it for, is enabled to do so only at the cost to the American consumer of higher rates on American railroads, so that the difference between the prices charged at home and those charged abroad comes out of the pockets of the patrons of our railroads, there will follow so signal an exhibition of the common sense of the average American citizen as will thoroughly vindicate our right to self-government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Republican orators express great concern for the workingman. Perhaps the most lurid passages in the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] on yesterday were devoted to this subject. There is no doubt that in times past a great element in the success of the Republican party has been its ability to make laboring men believe that they owe their employment to that organization. But I warn the gentleman that the old arguments need reenforcement. The men of toil are coming to be at least as well informed on practical political economy as any other class of our citizenship. They are contrasting the Republican claim that ultraprotection against foreign commodities is mainly in their interest with the Republican practice of admitting the nearly unrestricted competition of foreign labor. They have not failed to note that, while the Republican party has made certain that the machinery for the construction of the Panama Canal shall be bought in the dearest market, the labor employed there shall be got in the cheapest market and be also denied the protection of the eight-hour law. They are quite aware that Republican policies are largely responsible for the artificially high prices of many things they consume, while a considerable percentage of the high wages Republicans take credit for is due to the efficiency of the organization of labor.

The gentleman from Indiana will find that his generalities will little avail to answer the demands that aroused and intelligent labor is now making of his party. I commend to his prayerful consideration the formal arraignment of the Republican organization by the representatives of labor made in the document laid before the President, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the Speaker of this House, on March 21 last, wherein:

> First. They complain that the eight-hour law is grievously and frequently violated; that since 1894 they have vainly sought to secure legislation remedying the defects of that law and extending its provisions to all work done on behalf of the Government; that recently, without a hearing to the advocates of eight-hour legislation, a law was passed by Congress and signed by the President, as a rider on an appropriation bill, "nullifying the eight-hour law and principle in its application to the greatest public work ever undertaken by our Government—the construction of the Panama Canal."
> Second. They complain that no heed has been paid to labor's request for legislation safeguarding it against the competition of convicts.
> Third. They complain that no result has followed their demand for relief against the evils of "induced and undesirable immigration;" that the Chinese-exclusion law is being "flagrantly violated," and that it is now "seriously proposed to invalidate that law" and reverse our policy.
> Fourth. They complain that equal rights are denied to seamen; that even the partial relief afforded them by the laws of 1895 and 1898 have been threatened at each succeeding Congress; that petitions in behalf of the seamen have been denied "and a disposition shown to extend to other workmen the system of compulsory labor," and that, "under the guise of a bill to subsidize the shipping industry, a provision is incorporated, and has already passed the Senate, providing for a form of conscription which would make compulsory naval service a condition precedent to employment on privately owned vessels."
> Fifth. They complain that undermanning and unskilled manning of vessels are largely responsible for disasters like the burning of the Slocum in New York Harbor and the wreck of the Rio de Janeiro at San Francisco, with their terrible and unnecessary loss of human life, and that measures presented by them more in the interest of the public than of themselves, calculated to prevent such calamities, have not been adopted.
> Sixth. They complain that they have vainly sought the passage of a law prescribing that barges towed at sea shall be properly manned and equipped so as to avoid the loss of life now frequently involved in cutting them loose during storms and leaving the crews to perish.

Seventh. They complain that the "antitrust and interstate-commerce laws enacted to protect the people against monopoly in the products of labor, and against discrimination in the transportation thereof, have been perverted, so far as the laborers are concerned, so as to invade and violate their personal liberty as guaranteed by the Constitution," and that their repeated efforts to obtain redress from Congress have been in vain.

Eighth. They complain of the abuse of the "beneficent writ of injunction" in labor disputes, claiming that it has been perverted from the protection of property rights to the destruction of personal freedom, and that there is a threat of "statutory authority for existing judicial usurpation."

Ninth. They complain that the committees of this House having jurisdiction of matters particularly of interest to labor have been constituted inimically to it, and that requests to the Speaker to remedy this condition as apparent in the last two Congresses have been followed in the present Congress by even an accentuation of the condition.

Tenth. They complain that the constitutional right of petition has been invaded by the Executive order recently issued "forbidding any and all Government employees, upon pain of instant dismissal from the Government service, to petition Congress for any redress of grievances or for any improvement in their condition.

Mr. Chairman, it is abundantly clear that no revision of the tariff is to be undertaken by the Republican party. Every day's history of the present session of Congress has given confirmation to that report which found general currency when first we met here in December, that a compact had been entered into between the Speaker of this House and the President of the United States whereby the former was to be permitted to shelter the tariff monopolies on condition that the latter should be given free rein in attempting to carry out the Democratic policy of railroad rate regulation. The Speaker is to be congratulated upon the fact that the modus vivendi has thus far been observed and bids fair to outlast the session. In view of the fact that the President of the United States, in a speech at Logansport, Ind., as long ago as 1902, promised the appointment of a tariff commission to study methods for revising the schedules, and of the fact that there has been a general belief in the country that the President was in favor of a readjustment of many of the tariff duties; in view, also, of the fact that the railroad rate legislation had the right of way, and might easily, at the time the compact was made, have been expected to be finished and out of the way in time to leave a dangerous interval before adjournment; and in consideration of the further fact that such an understanding might readily have been vitiated in Executive contemplation by conditions subsequent; any candid student of the situation must admit that the distinguished Speaker of the House took a good many chances. Indeed, I myself should not be greatly surprised if even yet, in the last days of the session, there should come a thunderous bugle blast from the other end of the Avenue declaring that the tariff must and shall be reformed, and asking that a commission be named to sit on the subject during the recess, so that the people might be fooled until after the election of a Republican Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I have already spoken much longer than I had intended to speak, and I shall endeavor not to overtax the patience of the House, nor to do much further violence to the rights of those gentlemen who are to follow me in the debate. In the press reports of a speech which I had the honor to deliver in Kansas City not many weeks ago, it was stated that I intended to return to Washington to "expose" the President of the United States. That report did not properly state what I said, nor what I purposed to do. What I said was that it was not then within my contemplation to consider at any length certain acts of the Chief Executive to which I had briefly made reference, but that at some future time and in another place I expected to discuss them with more fullness. It is, I take it, well within the province of a member of this popular representative branch of the National Legislature to examine and, within the limits of the decencies and proprieties of parliamentary discussion, to criticise the official conduct of the President of the United States. The independence of the legislative branch of the Government and the responsibilities of the Executive Office justify and require this liberty of comment.

It is, in my deliberate opinion, a very serious matter, not only as related to pending and immediately prospective public questions, but as concerning the development of our institutions and the preservation of that wise balance of power among the coordinate branches of this Government to which so much importance was originally attached, that the present Chief Executive of the country is disposed to magnify and to personalize his great office and to exercise authority beyond not only the traditional but the legal and constitutional limitations of his place. [Applause from the Democratic side.] This is not the time or the occasion, sir, for anybody, and certainly not for one no more competent to the task than I can claim to be, to attempt anything like an analysis and final judgment upon the character and achievements of Theodore Roosevelt, as to whom future historians, as has been the case with his contemporaries, will undoubtedly differ radically among themselves. There will be panegyrists and detractors hereafter, as there are eulogists and faultfinders now. I shall attempt no ultimate judgment. I shall briefly, however, comment upon certain aspects of his character, and upon certain of his official performances, for the purpose of drawing what seems to me to be necessary and helpful conclusions. There are many things in the character and endowments of that remarkable man that I have admired. There are also, on the other hand, many things that, as a representative of the people in this great body, I feel justified in pronouncing to be of a nature to unfit him for a judicious, careful, just, and deliberate discharge of high executive functions, and under the impulsion of which he has time and again gone beyond the legitimate boundaries of his authority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This tendency of the Chief Executive is a matter of common knowledge among members of both Houses of Congress and the representatives of the newspaper press who are stationed at the capital. It is a serious misfortune, as I view it, that the unusual vogue enjoyed by the President imposes upon Senators, Representatives, and correspondents a reticence in regard to these excesses of Executive authority that would not under ordinary conditions be observed. In my opinion we ought to be honest with the people of the United States, and tell them frankly what everybody in this House knows, what every member of the Senate knows, and what everybody in the press galleries knows, that the President of the United States endeavors, so far as an almost phenomenal activity and endurance will permit, to embrace within himself and to exercise at once almost all of the powers and prerogatives of the three coordinate branches of this Government. Moreover, he seems to regard the high and solemn duties of his office not only as in the nature of personal assets of his own, but as appropriate occasion for the exercise of an indeliberate and whimsical disposition apparently as little regardful of the momentousness and significance of his action as that of a boy occupied with his toys.

The reorganization of the Army has emphasized the military aspects of the Presidency. The President's relation to the Army is not much different from that sustained by the Emperor William to the German army. It is notorious that promotions during the present administration have been made in a manner so harmful to the discipline of the service, and to so great a degree upon grounds of favoritism and personal preference, as to have become the subject of repeated and solicitous conference among men having knowledge of the situation and concerned with the preservation of the morale of the Army. The diplomatic service has fallen under the same influence. The Secretary of State, although himself a man of great ability and strong personality, has had many of his functions shorn. The President's relation to the general body of the service is much more intimate and direct than heretofore, and we have recently seen how, for the first time in American diplomacy, the President has referred to a high representative of the United States at a foreign court as "my ambassador." A similar personal dominance is asserted in the province of every Cabinet office, and everybody remembers the promulgation of the famous "order of silence" by which those high functionaries were forbidden to talk to reporters about their business, and directed to leave a monopoly of publicity to the head of the Government.

The civil-service rules have been made conveniently pliant to the personal and political exigencies of the Chief Executive, and, although in former days that gentleman filled a great place in the movement for civil-service reform, the records show that the rules have been set aside during his administration about four times as often as they were during his predecessor's term. The most important considerations of public policy are constantly and customarily made subservient to the personal feelings of the Chief Magistrate. The evidence, for example, to which everybody had access, disclosed that one of his Cabinet officers, some time since resigned, had been engaged, while occupying a high official position with a great railroad system, in repeated violations of the interstate-commerce law; but the fact of his close official and personal relation to the President not only relieved him from prosecution or censure, but actually won for him an official certificate of innocence in direct contradiction of even his own confession.

The famous investigation of the Post-Office Department was delayed, and the information upon which it subsequently proceeded was pronounced by a member of the Cabinet to be "hot air," after complete evidence of the evils in that Department had been lying on the desk of the President for many weeks. A post-office in a southern State was abolished by the President, and patrons were compelled to go 30 miles to another office for their mail, because of Executive pique over the opposition of the community to the reception of a colored postmaster into so close a relation with the women and children of a community where custom and social feeling inevitably revolted at the arrangement. A favorite, who entered the service of the United States eight years ago from a medical practice, and who, as a result of successive promotions, which it has made the trained eye dizzy to follow, is already well advanced toward the headship of the Army, came from the Philippines for medical treatment in this country, and, upon Executive order, circumnavigated the globe on his return at an aggregate per diem expense of $3,600 to the National Treasury.

In February, 1905, Admiral Walker testified that he and other members of the Panama Canal Commission, on the President's express authorization, charged and received, in addition to their regular compensation, director's fees for attending the meetings of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad. Expenses far beyond those that have scandalized former administrations are incurred by this administration with a gay and easy nonchalance seemingly justified by the entire lack of subsequent public criticism. Whereas wide and unfavorable comment was made upon one of his predecessors for too frequent use of one Government vessel, very little is now said about the employment by the President of the United States of the Sylph, the Dolphin, and the Mayflower together. White House repairs are undertaken and carried out apparently with as little hesitancy as that with which a prosperous farmer would build a wood shed; and $750,000 is spent in alleged increase of the facilities and attractions of the Executive Mansion, where no living architect can possibly see where there was opportunity to disburse more than a seventh of that sum to produce the very unhandsome results. Some of these matters to which I have referred thus cursorily may seem somewhat trivial. The catalogue is not exhaustive even of important considerations. I cite these few only as illustrative of that persistent and irrepressible tendency to personalize his office, to regard it as an appendage to his will, which characterizes the present occupant of that great place.

It is, moreover, inevitable that a man possessing the characteristics of the President should trench upon the traditional and constitutional restrictions of his authority. This natural inclination is unfortunately reenforced by certain considerations growing out of the political conditions of our time. In the first place, there is a necessary reaction upon the methods of our Executive Department by the unavoidable secrecy and arbitrariness with which the affairs of our colonial possessions are conducted. It is yet too soon for us fully to appreciate the irreparable damage done to our peculiar institutions by the rash assumption of the dangers of colonial government. From the commencement of this departure in our experience I have felt the deepest concern for its effect upon that constitutional balance among the different departments of the Government upon which our elder statesmen placed so much stress, and upon whose permanent preservation, as I believe, rests to a very large degree the perpetuity of civil liberty in this country. In the course of a speech on our Philippine policy in the Senate of the United States, on the 28th of January, 1901, I used the following language:

> This policy favors the growth of the executive department of the Government at the expense of the others, and is opposed to democratic principles. It involves singleness of authority, celerity of action, secrecy of purpose, irresponsibility; all contrary to the necessary methods of self-government. It begets a superficial admiration for "strong government," and "simple government," which are absolutely inconsistent with liberty. Let me again quote words of wisdom from the speech of Daniel Webster, already cited:
> "Nothing is more deceptive or more dangerous than the pretense of a desire to simplify government. The simplest governments are despotisms; the next simplest, limited monarchies; but all republics, all governments of law, must impose numerous limitations and qualifications of authority, and give many positive and many qualified rights. In other words, they must be subject to rule and regulation. This is the very essence of free political institutions.
> "The spirit of liberty is, indeed, a bold and fearless spirit; but it is also a sharp-sighted spirit; it is a cautious, sagacious, discriminating, far-seeing intelligence; it is jealous of encroachment, jealous of power, jealous of man. It demands checks; it seeks for guards; it insists on securities; it intrenches itself behind strong defenses, and fortifies itself with all possible care against the assaults of ambition and passion.
> "It does not trust the amiable weaknesses of human nature, and, therefore, it will not permit power to overstep its prescribed limits, though benevolence, good intent, and patriotic purpose come along with it. Neither does it satisfy itself with flashy and temporary resistance to illegal authority. Far otherwise. It seeks for duration and permanence. It looks before and after; and, building on the experience of ages which are past, it labors diligently for the benefit of ages to come. This is the nature of constitutional liberty, and this is our liberty, if we will rightly understand and preserve it. Every free government is necessarily complicated, because all such governments establish restraints, as well on the power of government itself as on that of individuals."
> A president can not be at one and the same time a constitutional chief magistrate and an autocrat—a President in America, with imperial powers in the Orient.

Sir, our fathers rightly distrusted the tendency toward excess on the part of the Executive authority. Their study of history had made them sensitive on this point. Its verdict is absolute as to the necessity of observing a balance of power among the respective depositaries of our delegated sovereignty. Seriously and permanently to disturb that balance is to enter upon the road to chaos.

There is no question in my mind, sir, that the reaction of our absolute government in our distant possessions is partly responsible for the tendency toward Executive excess, at which all close students of our institutions are now gravely concerned. But there is another consideration which reenforces the one just mentioned and the natural characteristics of the President. I refer to the phenominal popular majority by which the present Chief Magistrate was chosen in the election of 1904. The country had full notice of the personality of the Republican candidate, and was told from every Democratic stump what would be the inevitable tendency of the expression of that personality if it should receive an emphatic electoral indorsement. The recipient of that indorsement can, in one sense, hardly be blamed if he considers the verdict so rendered with such emphasis and after definite notice, as in the nature of a license to exercise his predispositions to the utmost. The result has certainly justified the prognostications. It is only fair to say, however, that these actions since the election of 1904 have merely been of a piece with those that characterized the Presidency of the present incumbent in his first fractional term.

Without attempting a numerous recitation, to say nothing of an exhaustive one, of the matters that may readily be cited in illustration of the proposition I am now considering, I shall mention a few which are of common knowledge.

Everybody remembers the famous "pension order" whereby, while a bill was pending in Congress concerning a classification of claimants before the Pension Office, an Executive order, impatient of the delay by Congress, undertook to perform the function of a legislative act. There has been a practically constant interference from the White House with legislative procedure at the Capitol. It will be recalled how the Irrigation Bill was threatened with a veto unless it should contain certain provisions agreeable to the Executive. The great struggle over the Cuban tariff, the recent controversy about statehood for Indian Territory and Oklahoma and Arizona and New Mexico, and over the provisions of the Railroad Rate Bill are a few among many matters in regard to which the Executive initiative and constant participation in all the complications that attend the progress of a bill from its inception to its passage, might well raise a doubt whether there is any such thing now in our system of government as an independent responsible legislative branch.

The Senate of the United States, in regard to those semi-Executive functions vested in it by the Constitution, has been treated with similar masterfulness. Some fifteen months ago the Arbitration Treaties were withdrawn from the Senate by the President because that body insisted upon the use of the word "treaty" instead of "agreement," thus refusing to countenance the new view that there are certain permanent international compacts into which the President may enter on behalf of this country without the participation of the Senate. In the case of the Santo Domingo treaty an attempt was made by the President of the United States to make a treaty with a foreign government without the action of the Senate, which treaty, moreover, involved a new departure in our diplomacy and the adoption of what the President has called a "development" of the Monroe doctrine, potentially fraught with the most momentous consequences to this country.

It seems to me that this is a good connection in which to emphasize the fact that this new doctrine of the responsibility of the United States for the debts and defaults of the South American States, involving on our part the assumption of the duties of constable for the nations of Europe, ought, whatever its merits or demerits, to stand upon its own pretentions and not be permitted to shelter itself behind the designation of "Monroe doctrine."

The Monroe doctrine, properly so called, is a part of the settled policy of this Government, and is very dear to the people of this country. A novel proposition may frequently find acceptance through its success in borrowing the label of one already generaly entertained. Whether this new international theory be right or wrong, it ought to stand or fall upon its own claims. It certainly is not "Monroe doctrine." It is just as clearly "Roosevelt doctrine." The original Monroe doctrine of 1823 is very easy to understand. As affirmed by Adams and Monroe, it involved three things. 1. The American continents were not to be subject to colonization by any European power. 2. We could not permit any intervention by any European power in the affairs of the South American Republics "for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny." 3. We could not permit the extension by the allied powers—that is, the members of the "Holy Alliance," formed by the sovereigns of Russia, Austria, and Prussia after the congress of Vienna in 1815—of their political system to any portion of North or South America.

When, about 1845, President Polk practically took the position that it was the duty of the United States to annex adjacent territory in order to prevent its annexation by European counries; and when, in 1881, Mr. Blaine held, in substance, that the United States was the sole guardian of transit across the Isthmus of Panama and the arbiter of disputes between the Latin-American States; and when, in 1895, Mr. Olney announced that the United States is sovereign in America, that the British colonies in America are temporary, and that these propositions are a part of international law, the prestige of the Monroe doctrine was invoked in favor of these various formulations of our international policy. Yet nothing is clearer than that all these involved distinct variations from the Monroe doctrine. Undoubtedly considerations based on national advantage, duty, and safety could be advanced on the one side and on the other in each of these cases. But that should have been the only method of argument. To introduce the Monroe doctrine was only to confuse both the nature of that doctrine and that of the new problems. The same is true in regard to the Roosevelt doctrine of our general guardianship of the countries to the south of us with responsibilities to their creditors. Whether right or wrong, and I decidedly believe it to be wrong, it is certainly new, and it ought to be examined on its merits without receiving any shelter or warrant whatever from the Monroe doctrine.

This tendency of the Executive, upon which I have been briefly commenting, has involved us in grave national wrong. The conduct of this Government under the lead of the President of the United States in regard to the means by which the independence of Panama was recognized and the arrangements were made for the construction of the Panama Canal is, in my opinion, an indelible stain upon the fair fame and good faith of this Government. In order that the object had in view by the President should be achieved it was necessary to override a statute of the United States, to break a solemn treaty with a foreign government, and to commit an act of war, and without authority of Congress, against a people with whom we were at peace. The law known as the Spooner Act expressly directed the President of the United States to proceed with the construction of the Nicaragua Canal if, within a reasonable time, he could not secure the consent of the Government of the United States of Colombia to the treaty providing for the construction of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama. That consent he did not obtain.

It is beside the question to contend that the United States of Colombia ought to have ratified the treaty. It is an independent government and had a right to reject the treaty if it chose to without giving us any reason whatever. But, upon the rejectioin of the treaty, instead of proceeding to carry out the plain and specific direction of the act of Congress to construct the Nicaragua Canal, the President of the United States recognized the independence of Panama, a revolted province of the United States of Colombia, used the armed forces of the United States to prevent Colombia from reestablishing her authority over that territory, despite our solemn engagement in the treaty of 1846 to respect the integrity of her domain; which was unquestionably an act of war upon our part, made a treaty with the new State, and proceeded with what difficulties and scandals the world is aware, to the present stage of the canal construction across the Isthmus. There have not been wanting grave insinuations touching our complicity in the revolution of Panama against Colombia. Certainly the appearance of our gunboats at a time and place when and where Bunau Varilla had promised the revolutionists they should appear, and their effectual action in defeating any attempt by Colombia to recover her province, are circumstances strongly confirmatory of the suspicion; nor does the suspicion involve, if justified, any greater dishonor on our part than that which already attaches to us from the admitted circumstances.

We are at this moment confronted with another threatened act of Executive disregard of the obligations of the country in the matter of the Isle of Pines. On this island, of the approximately 1,800 resident property owners the Americans number about one-half. Over 2,500 Americans own property there, their total holdings comprising about ninety per cent of all the real estate of the island. There is pending in the Senate of the United States a treaty urged by the President and the Secretary of State, ceding this island to the Republic of Cuba. Against this act the American residents of the island are loudly protesting, but they are in grave peril, if the influence of the Executive shall be sufficient to force the confirmation of the treaty. Article VI of the so-called "Platt amendment," by which virtually the government of Cuba was created, provides:

VI. That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left for future adjustment by treaty.

No claim can be successfully made that this island passed to Cuba under the treaty of peace with Spain, for Article II of that treaty provided:

Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies.

And Article VIII provides:

* * * Spain relinquishes in Cuba and cedes in Porto Rico and other islands in the West Indies * * * all the buildings, etc.

In both these articles the translation of the Spanish text is scarcely fair, in Article II the expression "las demas" and in Article VIII the words "las otras islas" being rendered "other islands" instead of "the other islands," as they ought to be.

And yet in spite of the fact that by a fair construction of the language of the treaty with Spain the Isle of Pines passed to the United States, in spite of the fact that on that assumption a large number of American citizens have acquired property there and have gone there to live, and in spite of the fact that the Platt amendment itself expressly leaves the title to the island to be determined by treaty, the Secretary of State, in a letter of November 27, 1905, informed Mr. Charles Reynard, president of the America Club of the Isle of Pines, among other things, as follows:

The island is lawfully subject to the control and government of the Republic of Cuba, and you and your associates are bound to render obedience to the laws of that country so long as you remain on the island. If you fail in that obedience you will be justly liable to prosecution in the Cuban courts, and to such punishment as may be provided for such offienses as you commit. You are not likely to have any greater power in the future. The treaty now pending before the Senate, if approved by that body, will relinquish all claim of the United States to the Isle of Pines. * * * You may be quite sure that Cuba will never consent to give up the Isle of Pines, and that the United States will never try to compel her to give it up against her will.

The Isle of Pines is of course a small island. Its inhabitants are few. They perhaps can make but slight reprisal, either political or otherwise, for any wrong that may be done them. But I believe the American people, when fully informed on the subject, will insist that justice be done to those Americans who have cast their fortunes there in reliance upon the terms of the Spanish treaty and the manifest intendment of the Platt amendment.

Not long ago, in a remarkable special message to Congress, the President strayed into the judicial reservations of the Constitution by bringing to book a Federal judge (Humphries) for an opinion rendered by him in the ordinary discharge of his judicial functions, an unprecedented proceeding that would have jarred the credulity of "the fathers."

Sir, in connection with this matter of the proper observance by the Executive of the line of demarcation between it and the legislative branch of this Government, there has recently occurred a bit of history that I am not anxious to rehearse, and to which I shall now refer in passing only to use it as an illustration of the proposition I am trying to enforce. It is not pleasant to examine, and I shall not examine, the question of veracity that has been raised between the President of the United States and certain other honorable and reputable gentlemen. It is exceedingly to be regretted that the present Chief Magistrate has had the misfortune to raise the question of veracity with nearly every public character he has come in contact with during his Administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to let that statement go in the RECORD?

Mr. TOWNE. What is that?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to make such a broad statement as that "nearly every"——

Mr. TOWNE. No, I will say instead, "with a very great many." The returns are not all in. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, sir, what I want to say in that connection is this—and it rises infinitely above any mere question of veracity, as to which question I do not state any present judgment or desire to be thought as stating any: There is in the Chief Executive a certain quickness and caprice of temper which first expresses itself without limitation, and then remembers without accuracy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But there are certain respects, Mr. Chairman, in which a result of this unfortunate experience is of the very greatest importance to the people of the United States. In the last campaign it was admitted in many places throughout the country that the accusations brought against the Republican party as to its complicity and partnership with those great economic forces that to-day prevail in the civilized world were true. Republicans in many places admitted it. The answer that was made to the charge was, in substance, that the character of your candidate for the Presidency would save you from the sins of your party. "Vote for Roosevelt, not for the Republican party; he is bigger and better than the party," was the cry that saved your party in that election, my friends on the other side.

There were many thousands of Democrats in the country who believed, whether rightly or not, that the Democratic candidate for the Presidency was largely sponsored by and representative of the interests claimed by the masses of the Democratic party to be in league with the Republican party. So that the consequence was that many thousands of Republicans who would otherwise have voted against their party, and many thousands of Democrats who would otherwise have voted for their party, voted together for Roosevelt. When he came into office he had a sanction that no other elective official in the history of the world has had. He had great excuse to regard the vote he received as in the nature of a plebiscite, as a vote of general public confidence, in a sense substituting him as the direct representative of the people in a more emphatic way than the popular legislative body itself could be regarded as so representative. It gave him a most commanding position. There is every evidence that he realized it. From that eminence he could and did choose his allies to carry out his ideas of legislation. The opportunity afforded him permanently to maintain a position above the trammels of party was never before presented to a Chief Magistrate of the United States, unless to the great Washington himself.

In the Senate a combination was made with some Republicans and many Democrats, as we are informed on the highest authority, an authority I have not seen challenged, whereby an arrangement was reached guaranteeing 47 and probably 50 votes to the President, a clear and sufficient majority of the Senate, to pass the so-called Hepburn railroad-rate bill with amendments providing for a restricted court review and a suspension of the power of interlocutory injunction. Here was a certainty of the ability to pass this great legislation in practically exact conformity with the declarations of his wish and purpose which the President had repeatedly made. But, sir, within twenty-six hours after that agreement was reached, without notice to his allies, even to his ally in his own Cabinet, the Attorney-General, that arrangement was abandoned by the President, and another was entered into which commanded the support of, and is now known to be eminently satisfactory to, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, whose opposition to the President has, in the estimation of many of his admirers in the country, been one of the President's chief glories. The so-called "railroad Republicans" wore the air of conquerors. The Democrats were thrown out. This vaunted nonpartisan railroad-rate legislation became, so far as the President and his new Republican allies could make it so, a partisan measure, and the Chief Magistrate of the United States, shorn of his original barbaric power, manacled and humbled, like another Caractacus, but rejoicing in his bonds, walked by the chariot wheel of the triumphant Duke of Rhode Island. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, one great political result of this experience is this, that in the important campaigns of this year and 1908 you can not cover the defects of your party with the alleged excellencies of your candidate. The people of this country know that no man ever had a chance to be bigger than his party equal to the chance which Theodore Roosevelt had, and lost. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Henceforth our fight is against the Republican party and its iniquities, and Roosevelt is out of the way. He has repudiated his Democratic allies and forsworn his greater allegiance to the people, and he is now bound hand and foot to the coterie at the other end of the Capitol that dominates Republican politics in that body and in the country. He has formally abdicated his independence. He has willingly submitted himself to the party yoke. It is a pitiful surrender, but it will not be without its good effects upon the history of the country.

My friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS], who closed his remarkable speech of yesterday with the statement that this country is the best country in the world, is by nature no more an optimist than I am. I thank God, sir, that it is the best country in the world. I devoutly hope that the party to which I belong may always be devoted to those fundamental principles which make it the best country in the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We are face to face with a crisis in the industrial life of this country, in solemnity and importance, so far as I know, without precedent or parallel. Upon one side stands the Republican party indissolubly linked, as an organization, to those dominant powers of combination, concentration, centralization, and monopoly that have given its characteristic economic complexion to the history of the last thirty years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On the other side, there is abroad in the land a growing aggregation of resentment and anger because of wrongs that have not been redressed, of rights that have been taken away, of hope that has been deferred. We hear the mutterings and whisperings of a threatened uprising in the name of socialism against tyranny that has arisen out of exaggerated individualism based upon special privilege under the laws. In this hour, sir, it is my profound belief that the safety of my country is in the guardianship of the Democratic party, a party whose principles are coeval with the Constitution itself, whose perpetuity is necessarily associated with the permanence of those principles; a party equally opposed to the tyranny of the few and the oppression of the many, and which offers, in its fundamental allegiance to the inviolability of private property on the one hand and of individual liberty on the other, a refuge to the people from both monopoly and anarchy. In this confidence, sir, we shall go before the citizenship of this great Republic in the coming campaign, contending for those basic, characteristic, original, and necessary American doctrines upon which the country has achieved its glory and to which it must continue to be loyal if it shall survive to fulfill the prophecies of the patriots that have lived and died for it. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRUMPACKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 16950. An act to enlarge the authority of the Mississippi River Commission in making allotments and expenditures of funds appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Mississippi River;

H. R. 17114. An act to provide for the disposition under the public land laws of the lands in the abandoned Fort Shaw Military Reservation, Mont.;

H. R. 8952. An act for the relief of the trustees of Weir's Chapel, Tippah County, Miss.;

H. R. 16672. An act to punish the cutting, chipping, or boxing of trees on the public lands; and

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish brass cannon to the General Howell Post, No. 31, Grand Army of the Republic, of Woodbury, N. J.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 17842) granting a pension to Josephine V. Sparks, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6231. An act to establish a fund for public works in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes;

S. 5675. An act for the relief of Maj. Seymour Howell, United States Army, retired;

S. 1570. An act granting an increase of pension to Lydia A. Johnson;

S. 350. An act for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Sierra, deceased; and

S. 4403. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the highly intellectual effort of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNE], a large part of which was devoted to "the gentleman from New York," and a sentence or two of which was devoted to the headlines of a supposed speech of mine discreetly without any reference to the speech itself. I want to assure the gentleman from New York that the money question is no longer a live question, and that the question as to what party the gentleman from New York at any particular time belongs is not a live question, if it ever was. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Nor is there any gentleman on this side of the House—and I might extend the range of my remarks further, and say in the country, I believe—who cares whether the gentleman from New York takes the risk of a Congressional election in Minnesota or takes a detail from Tammany Hall. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I propose to address myself, Mr. Chairman, for a short time to the question of tariff revision. It is loudly and persistently urged from the other side of this Chamber that there is a general and crying demand for tariff revision, and that the Republican party is false to the pledges of its last national platform in failing to respond to that demand. I deny the truth of both of these assertions. On the contrary, I contend that outside of the Democratic party there is no demand for general tariff revision, nor even a concensus of opinion in favor of an alteration of any certain schedules; and that the attitude of those who now oppose revision is in entire consistency with the declaration of the last Republican platform.

Before I come to quote from that platform, I desire to say to our friends upon the other side that, about to enter upon a campaign for the control of this House in the next Congress, there is no issue that we more warmly welcome than that of protection. On every stump, from every rostrum throughout the length and breadth of this land where suffrage is not suppressed, we will appeal to the people basking in the sunshine of an unexampled prosperity as against the authors of the blackest chapter in our recent industrial history. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] The Republican platform of 1904 says:

> We replaced a Democratic tariff law based on free trade principles and garnished with sectional protection by a consistent protective tariff; and industry, freed from oppression and stimulated by the encouragement of wise laws, has expanded to a degree never before known, has conquered new markets, and has created a volume of exports which has surpassed imagination. Under the Dingley tariff labor has been fully employed, wages have risen, and all industries have revived and prospered.
> We promise to continue these policies.

The platform further said:

> Rates of duty should be readjusted only when conditions have so changed that the public interest demands their alteration.

The declaration in the platform in respect to the contrasting results of Democratic and Republican policies, was eminently correct. It correctly represented the conditions as they then existed, and the causes from which those conditions resulted. What were the conditions then, and what are the conditions now? In what respect has there been a change, calling for a readjustment of the rates of duty in the public interest? I contend that there has been none.

It will be necessary that I indulge in a brief retrospect. In November, 1892, Grover Cleveland was elected President of the United States and the Democratic party came into power in all departments of the Government pledged to revise the tariff. Within less than a month thereafter President Harrison sent to Congress his last message. I want to read from that message. He said:

> I have great satisfaction in being able to say that the general conditions affecting commercial and industrial interests in the United States are in the highest degree favorable. A comparison of those existing conditions with those of the most favored period in the history of the country will, I believe, show that so high a degree of prosperity and so general diffusion of the comforts of life were never before enjoyed by our people.

I have heard that assertion of Mr. Harrison denied upon the floor of this House, but it was the exact truth, as is capable of abundant proof. For instance, Dun's Review of Trade, in December, 1892, said:

> The most prosperous year ever known in business closes to-morrow with strongly favorable indications for the future. For this year the volume of settlements throughout the clearing houses is the largest ever known; the largest total of exports and imports ever known in any year; unprecedented purchases for consumption; manufacturers have made extraordinary progress. The year closes with all woolen, cotton, and silk machinery fully employed and unsold stocks much lighter than usual, while the demand for the coming season already exceeds the capacity of many mills. Shipments of boots and shoes from the East have been 5 per cent larger than any previous year.

So much for Mr. Harrison and so much for Dun's Review. Now for some Democratic testimony. I find that Mr. Edward Atkinson, well known as a free trader from Boston, in an article in the Forum for May, 1892, says this:

> There has never been a period in the history of this or any other country when the general rate of wages was as high as it is now, or the price of goods relatively to the wages as low as they are to-day, nor a period when the workman, in the strictest sense of the word, has so fully secured to his own use and enjoyment such a steadily and progressively increasing proportion of a constantly increasing product.

The country then seemed to be on the very top wave of prosperity, and yet within a short time thereafter it was plunged into the most deplorable condition known to our history. Why? Because the people of this country feared the consequences of a Democratic administration; because, especially, they feared the passage of a Democratic tariff law.

Our people have not forgotten the four years from 1893 to 1897, when furnace fires were extinguished, when mill doors were closed, when the music of the spindle and the loom was hushed. There was a paralysis of business, and throughout the length and breadth of this great land was heard the tramp, tramp of men who were marching to the music of despair. Confidence, the basis of all success, was dethroned, and distrust reigned in its stead.

The Wilson-Gorman bill, delayed a long time in its birth, was not sufficiently a free-trade measure to satisfy Mr. Cleveland, but it was sufficient to impair in large degree the business interests of this country. During the four years of Cleveland's administration our bank clearings fell off ten billions of dollars, our exports fell two hundred and twenty-nine millions, and, on the other hand, our imports increased twenty millions of dollars. It was a time when the wage-earner instead of hoarding was spending, and the capitalist instead of spending was hoarding. During those disastrous four years the national revenues failed to meet the national expenses by one hundred and fifty-six millions of dollars. The national treasury was empty. The gold reserve was depleted to pay the ordinary current expenses of the Government. In a time of profound peace we borrowed on bonds two hundred and sixty-two millions of dollars. Three millions of men were out of work. One third of our railroads were in the hands of receivers. Iron and steel products fell off one-third. And there is no such accurate barometer of prosperity as the production of iron and steel.

The calamitous conditions, that I have only briefly and in outline described, came to an end in 1896 by the election to the presidency of the man who was known to the people as the champion of protection, William McKinley. [Applause on the Republican side.]

As a result of that election we regained our birthright, the country came to its own again, and came to it through the open door of protection. Promptly following the election of Mr. McKinley and a Republican Congress came the Dingley law, the law existing to-day.

With what result?

With the result that the country quickly recovered itself. Distrust gave way to confidence, and in every respect we started on the upward road to prosperity, so that when the Republican National Convention met in Chicago in June, 1904, we had advanced a long ways along that road. Let us see.

Our bank deposits were then the largest they had ever been. We had more money in circulation than ever before. We had more iron and steel and coal, more agricultural products, more manufactures than ever before. Wages were higher, employment more universal, working hours shorter. Our revenues were adequate. We had accumulated a surplus. In every respect, from whatever standpoint viewed, the situation was most favorable. Our home trade was equal to the aggregate exports and imports of all the other nations in the world. What we did among ourselves in the way of business in these forty-five States was equal to the world's international commerce. Our home trade for 1903 was estimated at $23,000,000,000. That was the business of our home market, the greatest market on the face of the earth, and our foreign trade had grown to large proportions. We had made some progress in the invasion of foreign markets. We were selling our products in Canada, in Germany, in France, in Great Britain, and in Russia in the Far East. Americans were building railroads in London, bridges in Africa, constructing battle ships and making armor for Russia and Japan, and my fellow-townsman, George Westinghouse, had grasped the electric trade of Great Britain. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We were the greatest manufacturing nation on the face of the earth, not excluding England. We were making annually more steel in the Pittsburg district than Great Britain was making—Great Britain but lately the manufacturing mistress of the world. Since the passage of the Dingley law we had become the greatest of exporting nations. In 1865 there were four nations struggling for the supremacy—Great Britain, France, Germany, and the United States. Great Britain was first and the United States stood fourth. In 1885 Great Britain still stood first and the United States third. In 1903 the United States marched past Great Britain and took her place as the first exporting nation in the world. In the year before the Chicago convention we had sold in foreign markets $1,400,000,000 worth. It is only within a few years that we have become exporters of manufactured goods and yet in 1903 our exports of manufactures reached the amazing figure of $460,000,000, and the balance of trade in our favor was $400,000,000. During the seven years of Republican administration that had passed when the Chicago convention met the balance of trade in our favor was nearly ten times as great as the aggregate balances of trade during all the years from Washington to McKinley. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not the time nor is it necessary that I should go further into details in this direction. I have said sufficient to show what were the conditions that existed at the time of the adoption of the Republican national platform With respect to the policies from which these conditions resulted that platform said, "We promise to continue these policies." That promise still abides with us, and we propose still to abide with it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But we said that we would readjust duties when conditions so changed that the public interest demanded their alteration. In what respect have conditions changed since the adoption of the Republican platform in 1904?

I answer that conditions have changed only for the better. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have an astonishing statement here which I got yesterday from the Census Bureau, which shows that within the five years from 1900 to 1905, half a decade, in 42 States of this country capital has increased 41.8 per cent, wage-earners have increased 15.6 per cent; and strangest of all, and proof positive as to the wage rate in this country, while wage-earners have increased 15.6 per cent wages have increased nearly twice as much, or 31.5 per cent, and products have increased 30.1 per cent. Now, I have here a comparison as between 1900 and 1905, relating especially to half a dozen Southern States. I selected the Southern States because I wanted to show that in that region where the Democratic party prevailed Republican prosperity had entered.

Take, for instance, the State of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Capital has increased in five years in that gentleman's State 121.2 per cent. Wage-earners have increased 44.4 per cent. Wages have increased 87.4 per cent, and the product has increased 70.4 per cent, and yet the gentleman from Mississippi would have us believe that we are not so very prosperous.

The figures for the States to which I have referred are as follows:

State.	Capital.	Wage-earners.	Wages.	Product.
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Mississippi	121.2	44.4	87.4	70.4
Missouri	68.9	23.6	42.4	38.7
North Carolina	106.5	18	52.1	67.1
Tennessee	62.2	31.7	54.9	48.7
Texas	81.7	27.1	44.7	62
Virginia	60.3	21.2	37.8	37
Alabama	75.3	18	46.8	51.4

These are certainly astonishing figures and full of encouragement.

Now, I say that since our platform was adopted in 1904, in every particular relating to our prosperity as a people, we have made distinct and conspicuous progress.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. STANLEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he will be kind enough to put in the RECORD the basis of those figures—the authority for them.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman will find the figures in the bulletins published by the Census Bureau of the manufactures of the various States of the Union. These figures are taken from those bulletins, and are official figures. I say in every particular relating to our prosperity as a people we have made distinct and conspicuous advance. For instance, our money in circulation has increased sixty-eight and three-quarters million dollars. Our national bank capital has increased over $24,000,000. Our savings-bank deposits, which more than anything else show the prosperity of our people, have increased over $174,000,000, and the total of our bank deposits has increased over $1,250,000,000.

Our foreign commerce for the fiscal year ending June, 1905, exceeds that of any preceding year. The increase in the exports over the preceding year was fifty-six and one-half million dollars. That shows our ability to compete in foreign markets. The imports for the same period increased over those of the preceding year by over $63,000,000, and that shows the extent to which the foreigner competes in our market. Forty-six and five-tenths per cent of those imports came in free of duty.

Whether in the domain of commerce, in the domain of manufactures or in the domain of agriculture, last year was the greatest year that this country ever knew. But above all these figures of material wealth are to be regarded the general morality and intelligence of our people, their facilities for education, for intellectual progress which find opportunity for development only in a period of general contentment and confidence such as now exists.

Now, my friends, do these conditions indicate that the public interests demand a change in our tariff schedules? Certainly not. Public interest and national prosperity are interchangeable terms. What constitutes national prosperity? Many things in combination. The magnitude of a nation's commerce, the supremacy of its manufactures, the wealth of its agriculture, coincident with enlarged markets for the consumption of its products at remunerative prices, the general employment of its citizens at an adequate wage, and withal a sound credit and the universal contentment of its people. Neither alone nor in combination did these things exist when the Wilson-Gorman bill was in process of enactment, or subsequent thereto.

All of them have existed since the passage of the Dingley law, did exist when the Republican platform was adopted in 1904, and all of them exist in an enlarged degree to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is not necessary to our contention to claim that these things are wholly the fruits of protection, although they are in large part. Sufficient for us to know that they coexist with protection and the lesson they teach us is to let well enough alone. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I submit that the changes contemplated by the Republican platform as calling for an alteration of our tariff laws do not exist. Furthermore a revision of the tariff at this time could not but result in harm. All experience shows that tariff agitation, business depression, and temporary business paralysis come together. Let me quote again from the message of Mr. Harrison, to which I made reference a little while ago. Mr. Harrison said:

> The threat of great tariff changes induces so much uncertainty that an amount not easily estimated of business inaction and of diminished production will certainly result. It is possible also that this uncertainty may result in decreased revenues on customs duties, for our merchants will make cautious orders for foreign goods in view of the prospect of tariff reductions and the uncertainties as to when they will take effect.

It is claimed that there are inequalities in the existing tariff schedules. Undoubtedly there are, but there is no concensus of opinion as to what those inequalities are, and it is not in human nature or human power to construct a tariff bill that would not contain inequalities. Experience shows that the existing inequalities do not operate to prevent successful working of the law or are in any material respect detrimental to the public interests. Business conditions have adapted themselves to the present law. They fit into each other. Why make a change?

Who is it, Mr. Chairman, let me ask, that is now clamoring for tariff revision? It is not the laborers of this country, for, universally employed, they find in existing conditions unlimited opportunities to work at the highest wage rate ever known, a wage that enables them to live up to the requirements of an intelligent American citizenship and to educate their children.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman speaks about the increase in wages. I would like to ask the gentleman if the increase in wages has been as great as the increase in the cost of living.

Mr. DALZELL. I think it has, and greater.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman any figures on that subject.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, there is a bulletin published by the labor bureau——

Mr. RUCKER. And does not that bulletin show conclusively that the opposite is the fact?

Mr. DALZELL. I think not. I just quoted a little while ago to the gentleman what seems to me to be conclusive proof as to the rise of wages, how wages have risen to twice as great an extent as the number of wage earners, according to the figures from the Census Bureau.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true as shown by official statistics that wages were higher in 1890 than they were in 1900?

Mr. DALZELL. Possibly in some employments, but not in all.

Mr. RUCKER. In all employments.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. RUCKER. Do not the statistics show it?

Mr. DALZELL. I say they do not.

Mr. RUCKER. Then the gentleman differs from the facts as shown by the statistics.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, then, for the present, at least, we shall have to differ. I say not the laborers. They are not clamoring for tariff changes. It is not the farmers of this country, for they find for their products the splendid market created by the large army of wage-earning consumers. Not the farmers, I say, for they have been released from their farm mortgages, and their accumulations are filling to overflowing the savings banks of every city and town in this happy land. Not the great body of artisans, for they live in contentment, enjoying the fruits and the luxuries even that make life worth living. Not any or all of these. Who then?

The producers of other lands who cast longing eyes to the tempting markets of 80,000,000 of prosperous people. Every manufacturer in England, in Germany, in France, in Canada, or elsewhere who has no interest here, but is looking out for his own, is in favor of a revision of the American tariff. So is the great body of importers, many of them aliens. So are the rich men with fixed incomes who are in favor of dear money and cheap labor. So is the Democratic party, lean and hungry from its long wandering in the desert, hopeless, thirsty for patronage and power. So is every Democratic doctrinaire, every disciple of Bastiat and Cobden, and the Manchester school, free trader at heart with his mouth full of catchwords, willing hypocritically to assume a belief in any doctrine that he thinks may catch the popular ear. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does Governor Cummins of Iowa and the Massachusetts Republican delegation in this House belong to any of the classes that the gentleman has just enumerated?

Mr. DALZELL. I am just about to come to this class now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad the gentleman is.

Mr. DALZELL. So far as Governor Cummins is concerned, of course, I have no personal knowledge, but I have been informed he is on the back track now. So far as our other friends are concerned, I was going to pay them my compliments by saying that in addition to the Democratic and mugwump press and all that portion which sails under the name of "independent" might be added our few discontented friends who believe in free trade in what they are pleased to call "raw materials" and in protection on their finished products. Then there is a little coterie here and there who would fain have some particular schedule of the Dingley bill readjusted, but there is no considerable body of them that can agree on the particular schedule which shall be readjusted.

And let me tell my friend from Missouri, with the forces thus arrayed, with the laborer and the farmer and the artisan and the great body of contented citizens upon one side and the foreigner across the seas and the free trader at home, avowed or masked on the other side, and the small contingent of the discontented, there can be no doubt as to what would be the result of a popular vote. [Applause on the Republican side.] For answer there comes yet the reverberating roar of the last Presidential election and the potential voice of the great American electorate enthusiastic followers after the banner on which is inscribed "Protection to American industries!" [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What about the reverberating roar of the election in Ohio and Pennsylvania in 1905?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman let me answer that?

Mr. DALZELL. You can answer for Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The reverberating roar in Ohio was the election of the entire State ticket with the exception of governor by a very large majority, one branch of the legislature Republican and the other Democratic by 1 majority.

Mr. KEIFER. Forty thousand Republican majority.

Mr. DALZELL. The reverberating roar in Pennsylvania was the election of a Democratic State treasurer and all the rest of the Republican ticket.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What about the hundred thousand majority when the State went half a million for Roosevelt?

Mr. DALZELL. It was because the people believed, without regard to whether they were Democrats or Republicans or Prohibitionists or Mugwumps, that the time had come when honest men ought to assert themselves in the election of a State treasurer; and the Republicans were honest enough and manly enough to come to the fore and elect a man whom they believed to be honest without regard to his party affiliations. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One other question and then I will quit. Is that the reason Pittsburg went Democratic in April?

Mr. DALZELL. No; Pittsburg did not go Democratic.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did not Pittsburg elect a Democratic mayor?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; a Democratic mayor, but the gentleman is misinformed. Pittsburg did not go Democratic. There was a fusion ticket and it was made for the same reason I have already given as to the State, and I suppose that is the same reason that induced Missouri to go Republican in the last election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will tell you what induced Missouri to go Republican. It was Parker's telegram that made 46,000 Democrats stay at home.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, they were wiser Democrats than Democrats usually are. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he recalls the name of the distinguished Democrat of this country who formally notified Alton B. Parker of his nomination. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman if the last Presidential candidate but one destroyed the party and the last candidate caused 40,000 Democrats to stay at home in one State, what will happen the next time? [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the arguments that our Democratic friends present in favor of tariff revision? They may be found, I think, under three heads. First, hostility to the protective system; secondly, an old campaign cry not very successful in the past, but revamped for present use with sundry embellishments and misrepresentations, to wit, that we sell our goods abroad at a less price than we sell them for at home, and third and largely, declamation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask a question, not so much as to where we sell our goods but how we make our goods? Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania name me any steel mill in the world that can make steel rails cheaper than they are made at Pittsburg? Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania name me any iron furnace in the world that can make pig iron cheaper than at Birmingham?

Mr. DALZELL. I think not; and I am coming to that question, if the gentleman will have patience, in a few moments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do we need protection to protect us against the market that we can meet cheaper than anybody else?

Mr. DALZELL. I will answer the gentleman's question in due course if he will have the patience.

Do we sell goods abroad cheaper than we do at home? Undoubtedly, sometimes—certain kinds of goods—the kind of goods the sale of which promises us a foothold in a foreign market, and to a limited extent, to wit, to the extent of our surplus. Why? Well, for a number of reasons—all of them patent to business men. The first and foremost, because our home production exceeds our home consumption; and the excess of production must be sold in a foreign market or our factories and our workmen remain during a portion of each year idle.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. For a question, yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Do you contend that the sale of five hundred million of manufactured products abroad was simply the sale of excess or surplus?

Mr. DALZELL. But I am not talking about the total of our foreign sales, but about the goods that are alleged to be sold abroad at lower prices than they are sold for at home.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Do you contend that that five hundred millions are surplus or excess?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, not at all.

Mr. PADGETT. Then were they not all sold abroad in competition with foreign conditions?

Mr. DALZELL. Of course they were.

Mr. PADGETT. Then why do we need artificial stimulus here if we can sell five hundred millions in competition at their own door?

Mr. DALZELL. I think I have already substantially answered the gentleman's question. We have in this country, by reason of the skill of our workmen, by reason of our general prosperity, by reason of our inventive genius, by reason of our improved machinery, arrived at a period when we can make in this country on an average of nine months all that the country can consume in the year.

It is a plain business proposition whether or not we shall run the year around and sell all of our goods in any market, or whether we shall run nine months and close up our factories the other three. But that is not the only reason. Another reason is because, in order to gain a foothold in foreign markets, the price must be regulated so as to meet the price in the foreign market with which we come in competition. And another reason is because, in our contest for entrance into the world's markets, we have to encounter a system of tariffs, of syndicates, of cartels, of bounties, all of which were made for the purpose of excluding us from those markets. And another reason is because it is a custom as old as commerce itself, and a universally recognized industrial policy. And still another reason is because the merchants of all countries have two schedules of prices—a home price and an export price.

Now, in what way does this practice help us? It keeps our factories going and our men from idleness. It maintains the American wage. It secures us a foothold in, and, ultimately, to some extent, a command of foreign markets. It does no harm. It does not result in adding to the price to the home consumer, for the reason, first, that it is not of such extent as to affect the price to the home consumer, and second, because a comparison of home prices with foreign prices will show that our home prices are as low, and sometimes lower, than those abroad.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Is not that surplus that you speak of the result of selling abroad at a lower price than you are willing to sell at home, and if you would reduce the price to the home consumer to the same level to which you sell that surplus abroad, would not the surplus disappear? Would not that surplus be absorbed by the home consumer?

Mr. DALZELL. In other words, after the man is full you can make him fuller. After the country is supplied, then dump on them the surplus. That is the remedy suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who said, "Why do you not sell your surplus in your home market?"

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Reduce the price, and the surplus that you speak of would disappear.

Mr. DALZELL. This country can only take so much of anything at any price, and, when the home market is supplied, the surplus must go abroad.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Would the gentleman be willing to sell to the home consumer at the same price at which he sells that surplus abroad?

Mr. DALZELL. I understand the gentleman's question. It resolves itself into simply what I said a moment ago. After you have got the market fully supplied, supply it over again with the surplus.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania mean to contend that you not only supply the wants but the desires of the people? That they have got all they need, and all they buy, and also all they want?

Mr. DALZELL. I think so. I think that condition of things exists in this country to-day, absolutely.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama asked a little while ago, "Then why do we need protection?" Well, because under the conditions I am describing protection does no harm. We need protection for the purpose of preventing foreigners from entering our markets as a dumping ground and from making war on our markets in periods of depression in their home market. Now, that is not a matter of theory. It is a matter of experience. Let me illustrate:

In the calendar year 1900 we imported iron and steel and manufactures of iron and steel to the amount of $20,443,911, and in 1901 our imports of these commodities amounted to $20,394,995. These are foreign values. Our imports of iron and steel early in 1902 were increasing, notwithstanding the Dingley tariff. The Iron Age for January 16 reported the sale of 3,000 tons of foreign billets for delivery at Youngstown, Ohio, at $27.50 per ton, with further business pending. It added that a number of eastern consumers were using small quantities of foreign steel. The Iron Trade Review of the same date said that a large quantity of German Bessemer pig iron had been sold for delivery in this country, and it noted the sale of 7,000 tons of English Bessemer pig iron also to this country. It said further that "a recent sale of German spiegeleisen for export to the United States indicated that our steel makers have not been able to supply their wants from such of their furnaces as ordinarily run on spiegel," and added that "the importation of steel is also expected to grow steadily in the coming months." A telegraphic dispatch from Berlin, Germany, to the London Iron and Coal Trades Review of December 6, 1901, said:

> Our exports continue to increase. German manufacturers have even shipped to America sheets for tin plates, and even thick iron sheets, also half finished products; and in the month of October the quantity of the latter and of finished products exported was nearly equal to half our total production of pig iron.

There was a period, you will observe, when we needed all the protection we had to prevent foreign incursions into our market.

But even if the custom that we are discussing were admitted to be an evil, cutting down the tariff would not remedy it except by ruining our industries to such an extent that we would have no goods to sell in the foreign market and very much less to sell in the home market. The cure would be worse than the disease.

Notwithstanding what our friends upon the other side say, there is no secrecy about this commercial custom. It is not done in a corner, and it needs no excuse or apology.

The United States Steel Company, in its last annual report, a public document, dated December 31, 1905, uses this language:

> The prices received for export during the year were materially in excess of those previously received, and approached more closely domestic prices. It is the policy of manufacturers to keep the furnaces, mills, and transportation companies in operation to their full capacity whenever practicable. Obviously this is wise. It results in lower cost of production and thereby influences lower prices generally to the domestic purchaser, and it secures continuous employment to the wage-earner. For these reasons it is sometimes deemed proper and desirable to sell for export what otherwise would be surplus product at prices lower than domestic prices. If a contrary policy should be adopted, the general cost of production would be increased, the employee at times would be idle, and the balance of trade between foreign countries and this country would be changed to the prejudice of the latter. This policy has been adopted, and is practiced generally throughout the business world. However, trade conditions during 1905 enabled the manufacturers of steel in this country to realize fair prices for their export commodities.

I might quote testimony of others of a similar character ad infinitum. There is no end of it in the hearings that were had by the Industrial Commission. So that notwithstanding the claims of our friends upon the other side, this is not any secret matter, nor a matter needing, as I said, excuse or apology. The real question is how much do we sell abroad at a lower price than we sell at home?

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is a material question that can not be answered by vague and irresponsible statements and by loud declamation. What is said here and there by this man and that man in general terms may have some bearing upon the question as to whether we sell abroad at lower prices or not, but has no bearing upon the question as to the extent of the custom. It simply serves to confuse the issue.

Statistics gathered by a nonpartisan commission show that of the total of our stupendous manufactures 97 per cent are sold in our magnificent home market, leaving only 3 per cent to be sold abroad. These statistics further show that of the 3 per cent sold abroad as much as 90 per cent are sold at as high and sometimes at higher prices than those that are sold at home. So that after all you have the insignificant sum of 10 per cent of 3 per cent of goods sold abroad at lower prices than they are sold at home. Three-tenths of 1 per cent is the sum and substance of the whole of what all this controversy is about. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Senator GALLINGER, who made a careful examination of this subject——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him three questions? The gentleman's position, as I understand it, is that we do sell abroad at a lower price than we sell here.

Mr. DALZELL. Some things.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And that that is justifiable? Now, if that is true, then those Republican orators who have asserted that we do not sell abroad cheaper than we do at home did not know what they were talking about. Isn't that true?

Mr. DALZELL. I think they made a mistake, if they so asserted, to the extent which I have stated here.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, if your conclusions are correct, are not the conclusions of my friend from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] and my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] incorrect when they say that we only sell shop-worn and obsolete goods cheaper in Europe than we are selling them at home?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I do not know whether they said that or not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] said that in that famous speech of his——

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is of age. Ask him.

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman from Missouri is stating a newspaper account of what I said instead of the words which I used. I made no such statement, I thought no such thing, and such, so far is I know, is not the fact.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I will prove it by the RECORD, unless you change the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman when he proves that will also prove, if I may be allowed to interrupt, that the famous Tom Johnson voted against the Wilson bill as it went from the House, as the gentleman from Missouri asserted two weeks ago, amid a storm of Democratic applause.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I will state in one sentence what Tom Johnson did. He voted for the Wilson bill as it left the House, and against the Wilson bill as it was reported back here from the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. That is exactly what I said, and the gentleman denied in a loud voice, amid Democratic applause, that that was so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There was so much noise that nobody could tell what either one of us said.

Mr. PAYNE. It shows how the gentleman goes wrong so often.

Mr. DALZELL. I was going on to say that Senator GALLINGER made a thorough examination of this subject, and in a speech made on the floor of the Senate on the 23d day of April last he placed the value of exports sold at a lower price abroad than at home at $4,000,000, and said:

> I can not find that the substantial correctness of this estimate has ever been questioned by the opposition.

And I want to say that I have never heard the substantial correctness of this statement questioned except by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who said that he did not believe it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Thomas R. Phillips was a member of this commission, was he not?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I believe he was.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did he not, by a supplemental report, although he was a Republican, say that out of two thousand letters of inquiry on this subject about export prices, only 416 had been answered, and that it was fair to conclude that the majority of those people who did not answer, they being usually large corporations charged with this practice, would have returned unfavorable answers if they had replied, and did he not attack very severely the suggestion which the gentleman has just made, namely, that three-tenths of 1 per cent is a fair estimate of the amount of this business?

Mr. DALZELL. I know that Mr. Phillips was a member of that commission, and I know he was not in harmony with the result obtained by the commission. He was a minority member. As to the other things, I do not know, and I am willing to take the statement of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. DALZELL. I was proceeding to say, when interrupted that I have never heard the substantial correctness of Senator GALLINGER'S estimate questioned except by the gentleman from Mississippi, who says that "he does not believe it." I trust that I violate no decorum of debate when I say that the belief of the gentleman from Mississippi is of mighty little consequence, against the conclusions founded upon evidence, of those who have examined, and who were competent to examine, the subject.

I want to say, as others have said before, that if we sold all of our three per cent of surplus abroad at a less price than we sell it at home, instead of selling three-tenths of one per cent at a lower price, we could better afford to throw the whole surplus into the Atlantic, rather than close up our factories and turn our men to idleness. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I want to say further that there is not a dollar's worth of American product sold in a foreign market at any price that is not the result of the labor of an American workman, who was paid an American wage. [Applause.]

I want to say, further, that it is the very mystery of mysteries to me that partisan bigotry and rancor should assault those, whether corporations or individuals, who, with characteristic American enterprise, are attempting to conquer foreign markets. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is the very infamy of demagogy to misrepresent them, but they will not suffer, for behind them is the great body of patriotic people who glory in and encourage American pluck and believe in its ultimate triumph. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I want to address myself to what was said by the gentleman from Mississippi in his speech made on this floor and published in the RECORD on the 3d of May last. There is not a single one of these witnesses whose testimony I am about to examine whose testimony relates to the question as to the extent of our sales abroad. There is not a single one of them who professed to know anything, of his own knowledge, on the subject of sales abroad, with one exception.

I quote from the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. What I read is taken from the report of the testimony before the Merchant Marine Commission, volume 3, page 77, and here is the colloquy:

> Senator MALLORY. There is another question. Some years ago we were shipping steel plate to the Clyde. As I remember, we had some very good evidence to that effect before Congress. Quite a large contract was made, and it was said that we were underselling the British steel-plate makers on their own ground. Do you remember whether or not that was correct? That was about four or five years ago.
> Mr. NIXON. I heard the statement at the time. I have no doubt that some contracts were placed in this country. I merely had to take the statement as I saw it printed. I had no connection with it.

That is one of the gentleman's witnesses to prove conclusively that our sales, not as a dumping project, as an excuse or an alternative, but as a custom—that is, one of the witnesses upon whom the gentleman relies to prove that custom, a gentleman who says that of his own personal knowledge he knows nothing.

Now, the next witness was Mr. A. A. Moss. What did he say? He said:

> I believe that the steel trust is responsible to a great extent in discriminating against the American shipbuilder in the way of prices, as plates and other material made by the American steel trust are shipped to England and sold at 25 to 33 per cent less than they can be had in this country.

So the gentleman believes, but he does not pretend to testify of his own knowledge; he also is testifying from hearsay. The next witness was Mr. McGregor, and I was glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi say that that testimony had been gathered for him by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], because I know that if the gentleman from Mississippi had himself read the testimony he would not have been responsible for its indorsement in the RECORD.

Mr. McGregor says:

> I picked up a newspaper in the month of February and read a piece of news that one of the independent steel companies, not in the trust, in Pennsylvania, had just sold 40,000 tons of steel rails to the Canadian Pacific Railroad at $21.50 a ton.

So far, you see, he is only a witness to a newspaper paragraph. He continued:

> You remember when Congressman Johnson was in the House he made a statement as steel manufacturer that he could make steel rails at a profit of $2 a ton and deliver them on the cars at Johnstown, at the Cambria Works, at $18.50 a ton. That statement is on record in Congress and is not disputed. Oh, they did contradict him, but the question here in issue, gentlemen, is, Did they successfully contradict him? because he was at that time one of the largest manufacturers of steel and iron in the United States, and as a manufacturer of steel and iron he simply took his books and showed that he paid higher wages than any concern in the trust, and he was then a member of the steel trust. These are the facts on record.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FLOOD and Mr. CLARK of Missouri both asked that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Mississippi had read the testimony he would have found that Mr. McGregor was a man who knew nothing about the steel business; that he was a walking delegate who appeared before the committee in the interest, as he said, of the laboring man, and he proved, but not, I fear, to the satisfaction of the chairman of the committee, that you could make steel for $4 or $5 a ton! So far as Tom Johnson is concerned, he did not say any such thing as the witness testifies to.

I shall have occasion to call attention a little later to what Tom Johnson did say as a manufacturer of steel and iron and the cost of their production. Tom Johnson, however, specifically denied that he was a member of the trust. He did not show his books to prove that he was paying the highest wages. On the contrary it was proven on him here that he compelled his men to take their wages one-third in cash and two-thirds in scrip or cease work. On this floor he made the assertion that that script was taken up at a premium. He then revised that statement out of the RECORD and put in its place in the RECORD the next day that the scrip had been lifted at par. I proved, as the RECORD will show, that it had been bought up on the street by one of Tom Johnson's relatives at a discount, thereby showing how he was cheating his own workmen. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] So much for three of the gentleman's witnesses. Now, then, the other witness is a man of some character, Mr. Wallace.

Mr. Wallace says:

Recently one of our largest steel mills sold abroad 100,000 tons of steel plate. They delivered it, I understand, at Belfast at $24 per ton. That would practically mean, with ocean rates as they are, $22 a ton at tide water. They are charging to-day at Pittsburg $32 per ton. About four years ago our company took a contract from the American Navigation Company for building here on the lakes two 7,000-ton ships, etc.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know who bought the steel you speak of.

Mr. WALLACE. The Harland & Wolfe Company.

Further along he testifies that it was sold by the United States Steel Corporation. Now, you have the testimony of Mr. Wallace that those 100,000 tons of steel plate were sold, that they were sold to a certain party, and that they were sold by the United States Steel Corporation, and he gives that testimony upon the responsibility of another party, who, he says, told him so. I take it that any lawyer will agree that the hearsay testimony of Mr. Wallace may be offset by the testimony of a man who speaks of knowledge, and such man was Mr. Gary, the chairman of the executive board of the United States Steel Corporation. Mr. Gary was asked to make a statement before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and he said:

I have no particular statement to make. I am not here to advocate any particular business or any particular proposition. I am quite ready to give such information as I have that is pertinent to the inquiry. Perhaps I ought to refer specifically to a statement made by Mr. Wallace, of Cleveland, Ohio, president of the American Shipbuilding Company, in which he says——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is in the hearings before the Merchant Marine Commission?

Mr. GARY. Yes; you know better than I what it is. It is the report of the Merchant Marine Commission of the testimony taken at the hearings, Volume II, page 811. I quote from his testimony:

"Recently one of our largest steel mills sold abroad 100,000 tons of steel plate. They delivered it, I understand, at Belfast at $24 a ton."

On the next page there is this question by Representative Grosvenor:

"Q. I want to know who bought the steel plate you speak of?—A. The Harlan & Wolff Company, Belfast.

"Q. From whom did they buy it? A. The United States Steel Corporation."

I notice that Mr. Wallace apparently speaks from information. If he had such information it was entirely unreliable. The statement is not founded in fact. The companies in which we are interested sold no ship plate in 1905 to Europe, only a little over 3,000 tons in 1904, not any in 1903, and I think not any in 1902.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To whom did they sell, Judge, in 1904?

Mr. GARY. We sold a little over 3,000 tons; I think it was in small, scattering lots.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not in a lump?

Mr. GARY. No. Now, as a matter of fact, the export prices of ship plate at the present time are nearly equal to the domestic prices; and that is true of most of the commodities produced by our corporations. It is also a fact that the domestic prices of the manufacturers of the steel-producing countries are generally higher than our domestic prices, or the domestic prices of the manufacturers of this country. It is also true that the export prices of the manufacturers in foreign steel-producing countries are about the same as the export prices of the manufacturers of this country. It is a fact, however, that it is the policy of manufacturers generally throughout the world to sell at times a limited portion of their output for export at prices lower than the domestic prices.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And that rule prevails everywhere?

Mr. GARY. Everywhere. The particular reason for that is well understood. It is for the interest, I think, of the domestic producer at times to have surplus commodities sold for export at prices lower than the domestic price, for the total result is to reduce the price to the domestic consumer. It is well understood in manufacturing circles that the manufacturing cost of factory products is materially less if the factories are operated to their full capacity. Therefore the manufacturer seeks to keep his mills fully employed, in full operation. He does that for two reasons: First, to produce at the lowest cost, and, second, to keep all of his employees fully employed all the time. Sometimes, in order to keep his mills fully employed, there is a surplus product; the product is larger than the domestic consumers will take. That surplus is sold for export wherever it can be sold. The foreign country in those cases has been termed a "dumping ground."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And you have to sell at a price that will meet the market, or you can not dispose of the stock there?

Mr. GARY. Of course if you sell abroad you must meet the market there. At the present time, however, the prices, as I have said, are pretty nearly alike.

In connection with Mr. Gary's testimony I submit herewith a table which he put in evidence, being a comparison of the f. o. b. mill prices, domestic and export, on iron and steel in the principal producing countries of the world.

Comparison of present f. o. b. mill prices, domestic and export, on iron and steel in the principal producing countries.

Country.	Rails.		Billets.		Structural, including bars, shapes, plates, angles, and tees.
	Home price.	Export price.	Home price.	Export price.	Home price.	Export price.
Great Britain	$31.50	$25.00	$24.00	.....	$1.60	$1.35
Canada	33.00	33.00	.....	.....	.....	.....
Germany	30.00	24.00	27.00	$20.00	1.50	1.25
France	31.00	25.50	27.00	20.50	1.65	1.45
Austria-Hungary	31.00	25.50	27.00	22.00	1.50	1.35
Belgium	30.00	24.00	27.00	19.50	1.55	1.35 to 1.40
United States	28.00	25.00 to 26.60	24.00 to 27.00	21.00	1.60 to 1.70	1.40 to 1.50

The gentleman from Misissippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] does not know a single one of the four witnesses to whose testimony he made reference. He does not personally know one of them. He does not know Mr. Gary and yet he indorses and gives credence to the three gentlemen who testify not of their own knowledge but upon heresay and refuses to give credence to Mr. Gary. Why? Because he is connected with what the gentleman from Mississippi is pleased to call a trust, and the gentleman from Mississippi went so far, although he somewhat modified it in the RECORD, as to insinuate that Mr. Gary was guilty of a falsehood.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Gary is one of those men whose lives illustrate the possibilities of American citizenship. A graduate of the common schools and of the University of Chicago, by sheer force of character and capacity he has attained to his present position as chief executive officer of the greatest industrial corporation in the world. In all the communities in which he has ever moved he has been a man honored by his fellows. He is a trustee of the Northwestern University. For two terms he was mayor of his native town. For twenty-five years he was a prominent member of the Chicago bar, and for a term president of the Chicago Bar Association. For two terms he was an honored judge upon the bench. He is as clean a man as any in this House. It will take more than the slurs of the gentleman from Mississippi to assail the character, the competency, or the veracity of Mr. Gary. His testimony was so destructive to the case of the gentleman from Mississippi that he declined to have it go into the RECORD. I need not say more. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, the practice of selling cheaper in the export market than in the home market is in conformity with that of every nation which makes goods to sell. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] the other day put into the RECORD proofs of this fact from standard publications.

I do not propose to add to that character of testimony, but I do submit to you testimony from recognized industrial journals of the world upon that subject. I have here—and I am not going to stop to read them at length, because I am occupying much more time than I wanted to—extracts from leading trades journals giving the home and export prices of foreign countries for basic steel bars, joists, and Bessemer steel rails, and other things, showing the wide difference between the home and the export prices. I insert them as follows:

From London Iron and Coal Trades Review, February 9, 1906, giving German home and export prices for basic steel bars, joists, and Bessemer steel rails, showing a wide difference between the home and export prices, especially for steel rails, the latter being quoted at 135 shillings for home consumption and 115 shillings for export, a difference of 20 shillings, or about $5:

The council of the steel syndicate have now by a majority of votes sanctioned an increase in the allotments for bar iron and plates by 5 per cent, and in rolled rods by 10 per cent. Since the beginning of the syndicate's operations the advance in plates and sheets has consequently been 15 per cent, bars 10 per cent, and rolled rods 10 per cent by a single stroke. As far as bars are concerned, it appears that the augmentation is due, firstly, to the large demand experienced from the export market, and, secondly, to the increasing bar exports of Belgium. Yet all the German syndicated works have not in sales reached the full total of the allotments obtaining previous to the decision to make the fresh advance.

It is understood, in connection with the international arrangement in respect of wire nails, that the Belgian and Swiss makers have given their adhesion to the agreement for the current half year. The German wire-nail syndicate intends to make endeavors to convert into a binding agreement the international understanding which was arrived at in Paris two or three months ago.

The inland prices in Westphalia are as follows: German foundry pig, No. 1, 78s.; German foundry pig, No. 3, 70s.; hematite, 82s.; white forge pig, at Siegen, 65s.; basic pig, 68s. to 68s. 6d.; Lorraine-Luxemburg foundry pig, No. 3, 62s., at Luxemburg; German Bessemer iron, 82s.; spiegeleisen, 93s.; English foundry pig, No. 3, 72s., duty paid at Duisburg; malleable-iron bars, 142s. to 145s.; basic steel bars, 120s. to 125s.; basic steel angles, 115s. to 120s.; joists, 120s. to 122s. 6d.; basic steel plates, No. 1, 145s. to 150s; open-hearth plates, No. 1, 160s., and No. 2, 145s. to 150s., and Bessemer steel rails, 135s. per ton at the works. The inland prices remain on the basis of existing contracts at 82s. 6d. for ingots, 92s. 6d. for blooms, 95s. for billets, and 97s. 6d. for sheet bars, all of basic steel. Open-hearth is 5s. per ton higher.

The export prices are undernoted: Steel blooms, 95s. to 96s. c. i. f.; steel billets, 97s. to 98s. c. i. f.; steel sheet bars, 99s. to 100s. c. i. f.; basic bars, £5 15s. to £6 f. o. b.; steel joists, 105s. f. o. b.; steel rails (heavy section), 115 f. o. b.; iron bars, No. 2, £5 18s. to £6 2s. f. o. b.; iron angles, £6 to £6 4s. f. o. b.

From London Iron and Coal Trades Review, February 23, 1906, showing home and export prices in the Belgian iron and steel market:

Makers of semifinished steel are extremely active, and our steel works find it difficult to keep pace with the deliveries asked for on specifications. Some large transactions in billets for export to England have taken place early this month, but during the last week a certain insecurity has taken buyers off the market, who are for the present keeping off so far as they can. Fresh business in the home trade is equally quiet. Nevertheless, prices are keeping firm, and we quote:

	Home trade, per 1,000 kilos., f. o. t. at buyer's station.		Export, per 2,240 pounds d/d f. o. b. Antwerp.
	French currency.	United States currency.	English currency.	United States currency.

Billets	130	25.10	91 6	22.23
Sheet bars	135	26.05	93 6	22.72

Certain irregularity exists in finished bars, but on the whole business continues good. Perhaps, in the heavier sizes, specifications could be more plentiful. Sheet iron is firm, and rods enjoy a favorable position. Exports to China and Japan are very low, and it will most likely take the Japanese some time yet to recover from the effects of the recent war. Some inquiries are in the market for the Manchurias, and our makers hope to be successful with their tenders.

Business with South Africa is still discouraging, and no orders of any magnitude will be coming forward till the new government has pronounced itself as to the labor question. South America has been quiet this month, and will most likely be so for some five or six weeks yet, but houses interested in this trade hold out for good business. Our trade with Australia is expanding. Prices for finished material run about as follows:

	Home trade, per 1,000 kilos., f. o. t., at buyer's station.		Export, per 2,240 pounds, d/d. f. o. b., Antwerp.

I have also an extract from a consular report, which relates to the same subject:

NORWAY'S PAPER INDUSTRY.

Consul-General Bordewich reports from Christiania that the export of paper from Norway is gradually increasing. The exports for which official figures are given were in value $2,179,000 in 1899 and $2,817,000 in 1904. Official figures for 1905 are not as yet available, but if recent newspaper articles can be relied upon the export for that year was larger than for any previous year. The countries to which the largest exports were made in 1904 were Great Britain, Germany, and Holland. The finer grades of writing and bond paper are imported from Germany, England, the United States, and Belgium.

Germany is Norway's most formidable European competitor in paper production. The larger German mills have formed a syndicate, whose object it is to control the yearly production of paper and to regulate prices and output. It is claimed by Norwegian paper manufacturers that the prices charged by the Germans for export goods are from 10 to 15 per cent lower than the prices charged in the home market. Two new paper mills were built in Norway in 1905. The Norwegian paper manufacturers depend on their splendid water powers, easy access to timber, and low wages paid employees for ability to meet competition and continue their business with profits. Some of their wrapping papers are now finding a limited but increasing market even in America.

Now, with respect to England. In 1816 Lord Brougham, in a speech in Parliament advocating the increased exportation of British goods to the United States, declared that—

It was well worth while to incur a loss upon the first exportation in order by the glut to stifle in the cradle those rising manufactures in the United States which the war has forced into existence contrary to the natural course of things.

And any man who knows anything about American history knows that our tariff was born of England's attempt to crush out our colonial manufactures. Why the State of Pennsylvania has on her statute books a protective law passed long before the adoption of the American Constitution. [Applause on the Republican side.] In 1854 a British parliamentary commission reported as follows:

The laboring classes generally in the manufacturing districts of this country, and especially in the iron and coal districts, are very little aware of the extent to which they are often indebted for their being employed at all to the immense losses which their employers voluntarily incur in bad times in order to destroy foreign competition and to gain and to keep possession of foreign markets. The large capitals of this country are the great instruments of warfare against the competing capital of foreign countries and the most essential instruments now remaining by which our manufacturing supremacy can be maintained.

So much for the English Parliament. In the "Second report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into the question of trade and industry, presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of Her Majesty," you will find the testimony of Sir Lothian Bell, president of the British Iron and Steel Association, as to the existence of a steel-rail trust participated in by the British and German manufacturers of steel rails, and the testimony to the same effect of others, including that of Mr. I. G. Smith, general manager of the Barrow Hematite Steel Company. These gentlemen bear witness to a putting down of prices to foreign buyers and to the putting up of prices to home consumers, and say it was their purpose to seize the American markets by selling rails there at less than cost and reimbursing their loss by a raise of price in the home market. It is matter of common knowledge to every person engaged in the trade that certain English goods are sold in the New York market at lower prices than the same goods are sold for in England.

Now, I have shown you by competent testimony, by testimony that would be admissible in any court, and unless rebutted would be conclusive, that this is a universal business custom indulged in by all trading nations, free trade nations or protective. The custom prevails in England, as I have shown you.

I say this is a wise policy. In the great commercial war in which all nations are now engaged, if we would gain a foothold in foreign markets we must compete with foreign prices. I recall vividly an instance in point, and I have no doubt many of you do also. A few years ago we had in this House discussion over the question of the price of armor plate.

It turned out in that discussion that the Bethlehem Steel Company, of Pennsylvania, conceded that it had sold a lot of armor abroad at a less price than it was asking the United States for it. And it defended its action upon two grounds. First and foremost, upon the ground that it was necessary if they would keep their works in operation and their men at work, and, secondly, on the ground that they were desirous of securing a market for their armor plate abroad. Now, what has been the result? The result has been that we are getting armor plate in the United States to-day at a less price than any other country in the world, and that within the last ten years we have constructed no small number of Russian and Japanese battle ships, all of which have been covered with armor made by the Bethlehem Steel Company, in Pennsylvania, and sold to Russia and Japan at a higher price than the same article is sold for to the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is the workingmen who have been the beneficiaries of that policy, and it is only necessary that you should take the statistics of our exports to ascertain to what extent in the line of various manufactures by the pursuit of this policy we have already established ourselves in foreign markets.

It is not only a wise policy, but it is a necessary one. In this same commercial contest to which I have referred we go out to meet foreign tariffs, foreign syndicates, cartels, bounties, all of which were made for the purpose of excluding us from the foreign markets. I am not going to weary you by reading to you all of the proof. I will put it in the RECORD. It is as follows:

I read from the report of Frank H. Mason, our consul-general at Berlin, made in the fall of 1902:

Much of the iron and steel exported from Germany during the past year has been sold on the basis of a clearing-out sale, for what it would bring and for prices which yielded little, if any, profit to the exporters. However, the large export served to clear out accumulated stocks, and by keeping the mills and workmen measurably employed, helped to palliate some of the worst effects of the crisis. So timely was the relief thus obtained that a powerful special syndicate was formed during the summer of 1902 for the purpose of paying bounties on exports of iron and steel. This combination includes the coal, coke, pig iron, and semiproduct syndicates, the Wire Drawers' Association, and the syndicates of sheet metal, girders, and structural iron, respectively, and has its central office at Cologne. The purpose of the combination is to pay to such of its members as export all or part of their product a bonus equal to the difference between the current price of the merchandise in the German market and the price actually obtained for it abroad; in other words, to sustain exports at the expense of the home consumers of steel and iron. * * *

It was shown in evidence produced before a court at Godesberg that the coke syndicate had sold to three large iron companies in Austria blast-furnace coke for $1.97 per ton, while the price to German furnace men was held stiff at 17 marks ($4.04), or more than double the export rate. The girder syndicate mills charged with having taken foreign orders at from 89 to 92 marks ($21.18 to $21.89) per ton, while maintaining a home rate of 120 marks ($28.56). The rail syndicate sold rails abroad for 30 marks ($7.14) per ton below the inland price, the wire mills cut their home rate of 150 marks ($35.70) down to 105 marks ($25) for export, and the rollers of plates and other shipbuilding material pursued a similar policy until the shipbuilders of the Lower Rhine made formal complaint that they could not compete with the Dutch and Belgian shipyards which derived their metal supplies from Germany. Whatever may be the result, the fact is that the industries of Germany are now more thoroughly and largely syndicated than ever before, and a movement is taking shape to provide a system of closer and more exacting Government supervision over such combinations.

Then only a few days ago, April 9, Joseph J. Brittain, the American consul at Kehl, Germany, said:

German chambers of commerce work hand in hand with the exporter. The German railroads, which are owned by the Government, give foreign exports the right of way, and in some instances special rates. Ships owned by the Germans and sailing from German ports carry German goods to their destination.

And so from the consular reports of Consul Winter and Consul Guenther.

FORMATION OF TRUSTS IN GERMANY.

Consul Winter, writing from Annaberg, Germany, says the record of corporate organization in Germany was as follows for the several years named:

Year.	Companies.	Capital.	Average.
1898	329	$110,341,560	$333,200
1899	364	129,564,820	354,620
1900	261	81,029,480	309,400
1901	158	37,563,500	242,760
1902	87	28,210,140	323,680
1903	84	71,409,520	749,680
1904	104	33,474,700	321,300

In 1903 the great iron and steel firm of Friedrich Krupp, at Essen, was converted into a stock company, with a capital of $38,080,000, or more than half of the entire new stock capital of that year. This accounts for the seeming paradox in the figures for 1903 and 1904. The most important and striking tendency manifested by incorporated interests in Germany during the past five years has been that of combination into variously named organizations to control competition, limit and allot production, and to maintain home prices while strengthening the more important interests for aggressive competition in foreign markets. (From Daily Consular Trade Reports, August 9, 1905.)

INVESTIGATING GERMAN TRUSTS.

For some years past the Federal Government has had a permanent commission engaged in investigating German industries, and the influence of the trusts and syndicates thereupon. The commission has accumulated a vast amount of information, but nothing has been published thus far concerning its views. Apparently it is undecided whether combines influence German industries and export trade beneficially or otherwise. It is said that an investigation of the tin-plate and steel trusts will now be undertaken. Some German papers are expressing their impatience at the silence of the commission as regarding governmental action. Complaints come from many industries that the trusts and syndicates sell their products to foreign manufacturers at much lower prices than they compel German industries to pay, thus benefiting foreign competition and injuring German exports of manufactured articles where labor forms the principal item of cost. (Richard Guenther, consul-general, Frankfort, Germany, June 8, 1905.)

MANUFACTURING COMBINES.

Consul-General Guenther reports that a short time ago the leading German manufacturers of derricks convened at Frankfort and resolved to combine with the Association of German Machine Works for the purpose of protecting their trade interests and to establish uniform terms and rates in conducting the business of that branch of manufacture. The plush manufacturers of France aim to establish a trade league for the purpose of regulating prices of their products, terms of sale, etc. They invited the German plush manufacturers to their convention, which was held at Paris on November 18, and the latter accepted. The movement for financial and manufacturing combines and fusions is still going on in the countries of continental Europe. (From Daily Consular and Trade Reports, January 11, 1906.)

And here I call your attention to a somewhat startling fact. Even Japan has taken a hand in organizing syndicates to keep her home market. I read from Consular and Trade Reports:

Thus we find in the case of contending business concerns the force and power of the Government in recommending a combination of interests, to the end that all may live and the industry prosper from concentrated effort. This we find exemplified in the recent combination of the various watch-making concerns. The Government, viewing the warring competitors, steps in and advises the formation of a trust. The business is put under the license system, and the Government promises in consideration of the combination the issuance of an imperial license, which virtually shuts off competition, and incidently puts the industry directly under the control of the Government.

And then I submit extracts from the Statistical Yearbook of Canada for 1904, showing the bounty paid by Canada on all kinds of iron and steel, and the amounts paid.

CANADIAN BOUNTIES.

[Extracts from "The Statistical Yearbook of Canada 1904," pages 185 and 186.]

The Dominion Parliament, in 1883, authorized the payment of a bounty of $1.50 a ton upon all pig iron manufactured in Canada. This bounty was continued until 1st July, 1889, when the rate was made $1 a ton. A further change was made on 1st July, 1892, when the rate was increased to $2 a ton until 1st July, 1897.

In the session of 1894 an act was passed providing that the governor in council may authorize the payment of a bounty of $2 per ton on all pig iron made in Canada from Canadian ore, or a bounty of $2 per ton on all puddled bars made in Canada from Canadian pig iron made from Canadian ore, and a bounty of $2 per ton on all steel billets manufactured in Canada from Canadian pig iron and such other ingredients as are necessary and usual in the manufacture of steel billets. These bounties were applicable till March 26, 1899, in the case of furnaces in operation on March 27, 1894, and in the case of furnaces commencing operations subsequent to that date, but before March 27, 1899, for five years from the date of commencing.

This act was repealed by chapter 6 of the acts of 1897, which authorized the governor-general to give (1) a bounty of $3 per ton on steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than 50 per cent of their weight consists of pig iron made in Canada; (2) a bounty of $3 per ton on puddled iron bars made from Canadian-made pig iron; (3) a bounty on pig iron manufactured from ore of $3 per ton on the proportion produced from Canadian ore, and $2 on the proportion produced from foreign ore.

An act of 1898 provides that the provisions of the act are to be held to have come into force on April 23, 1897. An act of 1899 limited the time and provided for a yearly diminishing rate of bounty. The act of 1903 provided for the payment of bounties on rolled wire rods ($6 per ton), other rolled shapes ($3), and rolled plates ($3), the articles to be manufactured in Canada from steel produced in Canada from ingredients of which not less than 50 per cent consisted of pig iron made in Canada. The act further provides that the bounties for 1903–4 shall be 90 per cent of the amount fixed by chapter 6, acts 1897, 75 per cent in 1904–5, 55 per cent in 1905–6, and 35 per cent in 1906–7.

The legislature of Ontario passed an act in the session of 1894 appropriating the sum of $125,000, to be known as the iron-mining fund. Out of this fund the treasurer was authorized to pay $1 per ton of pig-metal product on iron ores raised or mined and smelted in the Province of Ontario, the amount so paid not to exceed in any one year $25,000. This fund has been exhausted by the payments made for the bounty year ended October 31, 1904.

The annual consumption of iron and steel and their products in Canada is between 800,000 tons and 820,000 tons.

I also submit the following furnished by the Treasury Department taken from the statistics of the Dominion Iron Trade for 1901.

CANADIAN BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

As has been heretofore explained, the recent rapid development of the iron and steel industries of Canada has been greatly promoted by the action of the Dominion parliament in enacting the bounty act of June 29, 1897. But the bounty system had previously been in force in Canada. In 1883 the Dominion parliament authorized the payment of a bounty of $1.50 a ton on all pig iron manufactured in Canada. This bounty was continued until July 1, 1889, when the rate was made $1 a ton. A further change was made on July 1, 1892, when the rate was increased to $2 a ton until July 1, 1897, and in 1894 additional legislation provided for the payment of a bounty of $2 a ton on puddled bars and on steel billets.

The act of 1897, most fruitful of all, provided for the payment of $3 per ton "on steel ingots manufactured from ingredients of which not less than 50 per cent of the weight thereof consists of pig iron made in Canada;" $3 per ton "on puddled iron bars manufactured from pig iron made in Canada;" $3 per ton "on pig iron on the proportion produced from Canada ore," and $2 per ton "on pig iron on the proportion produced from foreign ore." These bounties have been extended to June 30, 1907; provided, however, that they shall be annually reduced after April 23, 1902, as follows: From that date to June 30, 1903, 90 per cent shall be paid; from July 1, 1903, to June 30, 1904, 75 per cent; from July 1, 1904, to June 30, 1905, 55 per cent; from July 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, 35 per cent; from July 1, 1906, to June 30, 1907, 20 per cent.

Down to June 30, 1901, there had been paid in iron and steel bounties under the foregoing acts a total of $2,168,435. In addition to these payments the Province of Ontario has paid since 1894 a bounty of $1 a ton on all pig iron made in the Province from iron ore mined in Ontario. To October 31, 1901, there had been paid under this legislation $59,741.

The following details of the payments of bounty by the Dominion government from 1884 to 1901 are copied from the Statistical Year book of Canada for 1901, for a copy of which the writer is indebted to the courtesy of the Hon. George Johnson, statistician of the Dominion department of agriculture.

In the following table are the amounts which have been paid under the Federal parliamentary authorization:

Also an article from London Iron and Coal Trade Review, February 23, 1906:

CANADIAN IRON AND STEEL.

The tariff commission in Canada has been asked by Mr. F. P. Jones, general manager of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, that the bounties on iron and steel be put back to the rates at which they were in the last fiscal year, namely, $2.25 per ton on pig iron made from Canadian ore, $1.50 on pig iron made from imported ore, $2.25 on steel ingots. These rates he urged the government to reestablish and retain unchanged until June 30, 1908. He asked also that a duty be placed on barbed and galvanized wire. Out of 37,000 tons of these descriptions of wire used in Canada in the last fiscal year he said that the small quantity of 3,000 tons was made in Canada, and this limited tonnage was made under an agreement with United States manufacturers, who not only dictated to Canadians what quantity they might make, but also the price at which it must be sold. He declared that if the imports of these wires from the United States are allowed to continue as at present the company's rod mill can be operated for only a portion of the year.

From the foregoing may readily be seen the difficulties that we have to encounter in our struggle to get into the world's markets.

Now, I submit that this is not only a wise policy and a necessary policy, but that no man has suggested an iota of proof that the policy results in increasing the cost of a single American article to a single American consumer. I say no man has suggested that.

Our friends, the opposition, have satisfied themselves by making the statement that we sell abroad at less than we sell at home, and then they expect you and expect the people to jump to the conclusion that we suffer thereby. I say that there is no proof to that effect and there is ample proof to the contrary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will my friend from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the manufacturing interests in this country have a right to sell abroad for the prices they can get abroad, and at home for the prices that they can get at home. But when they do sell abroad, whether cheaper than they do at home or higher than they do at home, does it not demonstrate that they are making the commodity as cheap as their foreign competitor is making it abroad, and they need not fear competition with a foreign competitor that has to pay ocean freight rates to reach our home markets?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think the question of cost has anything to do with the price in the foreign market.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But protection——

Mr. DALZELL. So far as protection is concerned I have already answered the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman what he is protesting against if we make as cheap a product here as they do abroad? We still have the protection of a foreign freight rate coming to our shores to protect us to that extent.

Mr. DALZELL. We need protection to the American working man against those periods when in the case of a trade depression abroad our markets are made a dumping ground for their products, and I illustrated the proposition by citing to the gentleman the imports of iron and steel in 1900 and 1901.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that so far as I am informed the manufacturers in my district exported iron to Europe during the hard times. It was because they could not find markets to sell in at home. I give him that instance as going to show that we were going into the foreign market to build up trade for our workmen in hard times.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman tell me when, since the passage of the Dingley bill, they have had any hard times in the iron and steel industry?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In answer to that I will say that in my district we have not had furnaces out of blast permanently in the last ten or twelve years [applause on the Republican side], either under the McKinley Administration or the Cleveland Administration. We have been, to an extent, prosperous under both. The gentleman asked me when we did have hard times under the McKinley Act. I will answer that the first year under the Dingley bill the price of pig iron and steel rails was no higher than the last year under the Wilson bill. It was not until we got into war with Spain and the Government made large purchases of material at home, spending large sums of money, that the era of prosperity began.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield to the gentleman any further.

I say no evidence has been offered, and none can be, that it costs the American consumer anything because we sell abroad at a lower price than we do at home.

In proof of that proposition I am going to confine myself to a single article, and I will do so simply because it seems to be the chief object of attack, and that is steel rails.

England is a free-trade country. A comparison of the prices of steel rails in that country and in our own country in the last ten years does not, however, show that, because we have protected our steel-rail industry or for any other reason, American railroad managers have paid any more for steel rails made at home than the managers of English railroads have paid for English rails. In the following table the prices for the United States are given upon the authority of the American Iron and Steel Association and for England upon the authority of Mr. J. S. Jeans, the secretary of the British Iron Trade Association. English prices have been reduced to their equivalents in American currency.

In 1904 the steel-rail industry in England was depressed and prices fell. In 1905 the demand for steel rails improved. On October 6, 1905, the London Iron and Coal Trades Review reported the price at Middlesbrough to be £5 7s. 6d., which is the equivalent of $26.15.

So that as far as that particular item of rails is concerned, it is manifest that there have been no unreasonable prices since those of our own and of the English market conform. If there had been any unreasonable prices in England, we certainly would have heard of it. No complaints are made there. No one ever hears of unreasonable prices for steel rails in the United States except from two sources, and they are Democratic politicians and the Democratic press.

Railroad managers do not complain; nor do the customers of railroads, for our rates are the lowest in the world.

The gentleman from Mississippi put into the RECORD a letter purporting to have been written by Mr. Schwab to Mr. Frick. How that letter became public, if it was ever written, the gentleman did not explain. It seems in the first place to have been taken from a western newspaper. Where the newspaper got it no one knows; certainly not from Mr. Schwab or Mr. Frick. It is manifest from the face of that letter that it is a fake.

Mr. Schwab is represented as saying:

> I know positively that England can not produce pig iron at the actual cost for less than $11.50 a ton, even allowing no profit on raw materials, and can not put pig iron into a rail, with their most efficient work, for less than $7.50 a ton.

Now, if you will take $11.50 for pig iron, which the United States can make no cheaper than England, from $12 a ton for steel rails, you have nothing at all left for your manufacture. You certainly can not turn pig iron into steel rails for 50 cents a ton. The letter is a fake on the face of it.

But I go a step further and say:

The charge that steel rails can be made at Pittsburg at "about $12 a ton" is an old one, which has been many times refuted, as fixing the American cost of steel rails. In May, 1899, to which time the charge was referred, it might have been possible for the Carnegie Steel Company to assemble the raw materials entering into steel rails and convert them into the finished product at "about $12 a ton," provided that, in obtaining its raw materials, it drew only on its own sources of supply and used only its own lines of transportation, and that the estimated cost of conversion did not include any return for the vast amount of capital invested in the various plants of the company and in its railroads and lake vessels, or any allowance for the wear and tear of machinery, or for the value of the iron ore and coal in the mine, the limestone in the quarry, and the natural gas—all raw materials which when consumed do not reproduce themselves, but have cost a great deal of money. It must be remembered, too, that at the time to which this $12 charge originally related, wages were lower than they are to-day and the price of rails was much lower. In May, 1899, some contracts for steel rails were "running below $20."

What would be thought of the level-headedness of a farmer who would estimate the cost of a field of wheat at a sum per bushel which would omit all allowance for the price he had paid for his farm; or for his horses, harness, plows, seed-drills, and thrashing machines; or for taxes; or would neglect to take account of the necessary repairs to his house and barn, fences, etc.? And yet it would be just as reasonable to accept as conclusive that farmer's arithmetic as the $12-steel-rail estimate.

That the charge that "about $12 a ton" covers the cost of steel rails to-day, even with leading elements of the cost omitted, can not be even approximately true is overwhelmingly answered by one simple fact, without citing others, namely, that the price for Bessemer pig iron at Pittsburg, the leading but not the only raw material from which steel rails are made, and of which the Carnegie Steel Company has been a large buyer, is from $18.10 to $18.35 a ton. More than a ton of pig iron is required to produce a ton of steel rails. How then could the cost of steel rails be "about $12" a ton?

But steel products, like all other products, vary in the market according to the different conditions. Mr. Tom Johnson, a steel rail manufacturer, said on the floor of this House in January, 1894, that the fair price for steel rails at that time was $19 a ton, and he said that steel rails ought to cost $2 a ton in addition to the cost of the billets; that billets were then $17 a ton, and a fair price for rails was $19 a ton. But that was in the depressed times of the Cleveland Administration. Steel billets to-day in the open market are $27 a ton. If you add $2 a ton, you have $29 for steel rails, which is a dollar a ton more than the market price.

I submit with great confidence that a comparison of prices from year to year will show that the regulating factors are the law of supply and demand and competition.

And I want to say this, that there is no monopoly of the iron and the steel business in the United States, and that in the very nature of things it is absolutely impossible that there should be such a monopoly. Our country is too vast in extent, its mineral wealth is too widely diffused, its capital for investment is too large, its individual enterprise and energy—the greatest factor in our national development—is too great to allow any man or men or any corporation to have a monopoly of the great iron and steel industry in this United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And I want to say another thing, our friends upon the other side to the contrary notwithstanding: The United States Steel Company is not a trust. It makes on an average not more than half the iron and steel product of this country. The independent companies are companies of large capital, ample resources, modern mills, and having large mineral wealth.

Where will you find in all the world any finer manufacturing plants than the Cambria Steel Works at Johnstown, the Pennsylvania Steel Works at Steelton, the Maryland Steel Works at Sparrows Point, and in the district of my friend from Alabama, the great Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, or in Colorado, the Colorado Fuel Company? With these in the field, from the very nature of the case, a monopoly of this industry is absolutely impossible.

Then I want to say another thing—that there is no combination in this country to fix the price of steel rails. I want you to note that steel rails have never been as high in price since the organization of the United States Steel Company as they were prior to that time.

It is the policy of this much-abused corporation not to raise prices, but to maintain the stability of prices, and it has rendered a great service to the commerce and industry of this country during the time of its existence in that direction. Let me quote to you. In their earliest report to its stockholders the board of directors of that company made this statement and published it:

> The demand for the products of the several companies has been so great that prices could easily have been advanced. Indeed, higher prices have been voluntarily offered by consumers who were anxious for immediate execution of orders, but the companies have firmly maintained the position of not advancing prices, believing that the existing prices were sufficient to yield a fair return on capital and maintain the properties in satisfactory physical condition, and that the many collateral advantages to be gained in the long run by refusing to advance prices would be of substantial and lasting value, not only to the companies, but also to the general business interests of the country. The strong position thus taken by the companies for stability in prices both of raw material and finished products has had a reassuring effect on the trade and has contributed greatly toward restoring confidence in the general business situation and creating a large demand for steel products by dispelling any doubt as to prices in the future.

That was the declaration of the company. Now, what say the outsiders?

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the United States Steel Company make woven wire and wire fence and products of that sort?

Mr. DALZELL. I think not; I think those are made by the American Steel and Wire Company.

Mr. STANLEY. Is there any connection between the United States Steel Company and that company?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know.

The New York Sun, in its issue of January 31, 1902, in commenting upon this statement by the board of directors, said:

> The United States Steel Corporation has so far done exactly what its managers have here said they were trying and will continue to try to do. They have rigidly kept their prices down to the point of reasonableness.

The Louisville Courier-Journal, a leading Democratic paper, said:

> The policy of the corporation so far has been to try to make money by reducing the cost of production, not by advancing the price to the consumer.

And all this time, mark you, the company was paying and still continues to pay the highest wages in the world.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle, of New York, the highest financial authority in this country, reviewing our large production of pig iron in 1901, said:

> One feature in connection with the year's large production and consumption of iron should not escape attention, for it is in one sense really the most striking characteristic of that period. We refer to the fact that, with the demand larger and more urgent than ever before in the country's history, prices were kept within moderate limits. In the case of every one of the leading articles of iron and steel the average of prices for 1901 is lower than the average for 1900, and in most cases it is very much lower. For this result, preventing that extreme upward movement in values which on so many previous occasions has proven disastrous to the iron and steel industries, the policy of the United States Steel Corporation is largely responsible.
> In the early part of the previous year, as will perhaps be remembered, prices had risen to very high figures, but then a decline set in which continued almost to the close of 1900. The beginning of 1901, therefore, found prices at a fairly low level. The business career of the United States Steel Corporation may be said to date from the 1st of April. Before the organization of this company the destructive competition threatened by the rivalry of the different separate companies which are now embraced in its control acted somewhat to demoralize the iron and steel trades so that some intending buyers were induced to withhold their orders. With the possibility of disturbance from that source removed, the demand, already large, became more active than before, and if the steel corporation had not firmly resisted the rising tendency prices would undoubtedly have quickly recovered to the extraordinarily high figures ruling at the beginning of 1900.
> But the managers of that concern made it a cardinal point in their policy to keep prices at a level only high enough to leave a fair margin of profit, and their action of course dominated the trade. The result is that prices at the close of 1901, while ruling above the low figures prevailing at the close of 1900, did not on the whole show any great advances. The price of steel rails was raised from $26 a ton to $28 in May, but early in 1900 the price had been $35, and the average of rails for the whole year 1901 was only $27.33, against $32.29, the average for 1900. Bessemer pig iron at Pittsburg averaged $16.37 in December, 1901, against $13.75 in December, 1900, but in February, 1900, the price had been $25 a ton. Steel billets at Pittsburg were $34.50 in January, 1900; $19.75 in December, 1900, and $27.50 in December, 1901.

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle of New York is not a partisan journal, nor is its trade columns edited for political purposes.

Now I submit that I have shown that no evidence has been adduced that the custom of selling abroad for less than at home has added anything to the cost to the American consumer. I have further shown affirmatively that it does not, and that under existing law prices are reasonable. I submit that I have further shown that our selling abroad at reduced prices is limited in extent and is in accordance with the universal custom of the world's export trade, is to the advantage of the home consumer, and especially to the advantage of the American workman, and that even if subject to criticism it can not be remedied by tinkering with the tariff. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I fain would stop here, but a remark made by the gentleman from Mississippi the other day urges me to proceed. I say that in any event there is no danger that the people of this country will intrust to the Democratic party the power to revise the tariff, for two reasons. First, because the party has no convictions on the subject, and second, because it has only recently shown its utter inability wisely to deal with it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Mississippi said the other day, pointing his finger across the aisle, "You have neither the courage nor the intellect to revise the tariff." Alas! alas! that I can go the gentleman from Mississippi one better and reply in the language of a Democratic leader, uttered on the floor of this House, that his party had neither the courage nor the honesty to make a tariff law. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Mississippi says, "If you don't revise it, we will." What a pretty mess his party made of tariff revision when they undertook it. Clothed with absolute power, having possession of the House, the Senate, and the Executive, they brought forth a measure that their own President baptized as a measure of party perfidy and party dishonor, and that the people of this country at the very first available opportunity scouted with disgust. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I want you, my Democratic friends, to listen, bearing in mind what the gentleman from Mississippi says, to what one of your own leaders had to say on the subject, the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Mississippi gave a certificate of character only the other day. Mr. Tom Johnson said, while the Wilson bill was being made:

> Mr. Chairman, we of the Democratic party went before the country in 1892 asserting that the existing tariff was wrong in principle and unjust in operation, declaring the policy of protection a fraud and a robbery, charging it with creating trusts, throttling industry, enforcing idleness, lessening wages, impoverishing labor, and creating a few monstrous fortunes, and pledging ourselves to abolish it if the American people gave us authority. They did give us authority, and then our haste to repeal oppressive taxes subsided, and instead of flying at the throat of protective barons and robber trusts the great Democratic party began, as it were, to wag its tail and look for crumbs. * * * While we have been fiddling, Rome has been burning. While we have been seeking offices and peddling offices the very disasters that we predicted from Republican misrule have come upon the country. Who shall sell stamps at Stringtown Cross Roads and who shall play ambassador at the court of Italy have been settled, but the burning question of the tariff is yet at sea and in the dark. And now, when, after the Christmas turkey and the New Year wine, we meet to consider at our leisure what shall be done to carry out the mandate of the people, given us almost a year and a half ago, the cry of distress goes up from all parts of the land, and American citizens by the hundred thousand are being fed by charity to prevent starvation.

"Oh, if you don't revise the tariff, we will." [Laughter and applause on Republican side.]

Never was the difference between Democratic profession and Democratic practice more clearly illustrated than in that party's futile attempt to stand by its professed principles, when it had the opportunity to do so.

Listen to the distinguished gentleman who then led the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. Wilson of West Virginia. He opened the battle with a high-sounding manifesto:

> We begin our task by an effort to free from taxation those things on which the industrial prosperity and growth of our country so largely depend.
> Of all the reductions made in this bill there are none in their benefit to the consumer, none in their benefit to the laborer that can be compared with the removal of the taxes from the materials of industry. We have felt that we could not begin a thorough reform of the existing system, built up as I have shown, story by story until it has cleared the clouds, except by a removal of all taxation on the great materials that lie at the basis of modern industry, and so the bill proposes to put on the free list wool, iron ore, coal, and lumber. * * * The question of a tariff on coal is neither a question of protection nor a question of revenue, but simply a question of subsidy to the great railroad corporations of the country.

And so the Democratic party, making tariff bills according to the confession of its leader, subsidized the great railroad corporations to the extent of 40 cents a ton duty on coal.

But that is not all. The distinguished leader of the Democratic party, making a tariff bill, said further:

Mr. Chairman, every reason for putting coal on the free list applies with equal if not stronger force to removing the duty from iron ore. If duties are laid for revenue, we could not select any duties more hurtful to American industries or more injurious to American labor than duties levied upon production. * * * Upon no ground of protection can the duty on iron ore be any longer justified in this country.

And yet, alas for the credit of Democratic courage, intellect, and honesty, the gentleman and his colleagues proceeded to put what he called an indefensible duty, of 40 cents a ton on iron ore.

The Wilson bill, made by the Democratic party, was absurd, inconsistent, and illogical, but worst of all it was a sectional bill.

It reenacted Mason and Dixon's line. Listen to some of the absurdities and sectionalism in that bill: Copper ingots were called raw material and made free, but pig iron was dutiable at 22½ per cent ad valorem as a manufactured product. Tennessee marble was protected by a duty of 40 cents per cubic foot, but New England granite was free. Combed wool was dutiable at 25 per cent, but combed silk was free. Cleaned Southern rice was dutiable at 1½ cents per pound, but sawed shingles and lumber from Maine were free. Binding twine was free while bagging was taxed. Agricultural implements were free while the steel from which they are made was dutiable. Ties to bind cotton were free, but to bind hay were taxed.

In face of this bungle of grotesque inconsistencies the gentleman from Mississippi calls across the aisle to us that we have neither the courage nor the intellect to make a tariff bill. Every splendid page in every splendid chapter of all the harvest years of Republican rule and protection is his answer. "If you do not revise the tariff," he says, "we will." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I am disposed to stop, and yet I think I shall not stop here because I want to have the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] have all the light possible on the subject, and I want to say to him in the mildest way that I can that American history contains no record so steeped in cowardice and dishonesty as the record of the Democratic party's attempt to make a tariff bill, and I propose to prove it. I propose to prove that proposition out of the mouths of witnesses, everyone of whom shall be a Democrat. Said the New York Sun, a Democratic paper:

Taking revenue and antirevenue together, the Wilson bill is a fantastic and personal bill. It is a jungle of unconstitutionalities and favoritisms compounded to gratify the more powerful applicants for license to rob and to vindicate the hobbies of Grover Cleveland put on record previous to the Chicago platform. It is the greatest humbug of the age.

Said the Louisville Courier-Journal—and I assume that no Democrat will question the orthodox Democracy of that paper:

If in the Democracy of this country there is a depth of shame which had not before been stirred by Democracy's alleged representatives in the United States Senate, within the past six months it has certainly been reached by the action of the Finance Committee in the latest compromise bill agreed on. Instead of a bill redeeming the pledges they were commissioned to redeem, a mongrel piebald of patches and pusillanimity, a grotesque hodgepodge of pretense and pettifogging, a nondescript abortion of incompetency, selfishness, cowardice, and treachery is the outcome.

"Oh, if you don't revise the tariff, we will." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Said President Cleveland:

There is no excuse for mistaking or misapprehending the feeling and temper of the rank and file of the Democracy. They are downcast under the assertion that their party fails in ability to manage the Government; they are apprehensive that efforts to bring about tariff reform may fail; but they are much more downcast and apprehensive in their fear that Democratic principles may be surrendered.

Every true Democrat and every sincere tariff reformer knows that this bill in its present form—

Alluding to the Senate bill subsequently adopted en bloc by the House—and as it will be submitted to the conference, falls far short of the consummation for which we have long labored, for which we have suffered defeat without discouragement, which in its anticipation gave us a rallying cry in our day of triumph, and which in its promise of accomplishment is so interwoven with Democratic pledges and Democratic success, that our abandonment of the cause or the principles upon which it rests means party perfidy and party dishonor.

I have a further extract——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. May I ask you one more question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has proven that that was a bill of party perfidy and party dishonor, has he not succeeded in establishing the proposition that it was not a Democratic tariff bill?

Mr. DALZELL. No; because it was passed by a Democratic House and illustrates what I say, that they have no convictions on the subject.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Was it not condemned by the Courier Journal and all the Democratic press and all the leading Democrats in the House?

Mr. DALZELL. It was introduced in the House of Representatives——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. As a compromise.

Mr. DALZELL. And passed here under force of a rule and against the protests of some Democrats who had the courage to stand by their convictions. Now, I am not through; wait until I get through.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. But I want to ask the gentleman how he establishes both propositions, that it was an instance of party perfidy and party dishonor and still it was a party measure?

Mr. DALZELL. I establish the proposition which I started out to establish by saying that Democratic party professions are one thing and Democratic party practices are another thing. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, the Democratic party was just as bombastic and conceited as to its power to enact a tariff law then as it is now. [Applause on the Republican side.] I recall when the absurd Wilson bill was reported in the House that in their exuberance the since peerless leader of two defeats and the gentleman then from Virginia, now the president of a great university, carried on their stalwart shoulders the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. I recall also the difference between that joyful day and that other day of sorrow when the Wilson bill was passed. It has been described in language that far surpasses anything that I could use by the peerless orator from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. He said [laughter]:

Last winter we passed a bill through this House under the leadership of the gentleman from West Virginia, a bill for tariff reform, which in my humble judgment meant the industrial emancipation of this country and the ultimate industrial conquests of the world by American labor and American genius. That bill passed through this House amid such a scene of triumph and joy as never has been witnessed in the history of a legislative body. On that momentous day the gentleman from West Virginia, borne upon affectionate and loyal shoulders, was the central figure of a demonstration which evidenced the depth of feeling throughout the American people, long pent up, and at last fondly considered triumphant over all obstructions. To-day no more pathetic figure in the history of the world can be observed than that same leader, shorn of his support, walking down these aisles, disdaining to prevaricate or misrepresent the actual condition which confronts us, confessing that he has been deserted by those in whose support he had every reason to confide—and asking us to record our betrayal of every principle which this House under his leadership has maintained. We are hopelessly discredited because our cowardice makes our surrender disgraceful.

And conspicuous among the deserters was the gentleman from Mississippi—

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Just one more quotation in reply to the assertion that we have neither the intellect nor the courage to make a tariff bill.

Said Mr. Harter of Ohio—you recall him, no doubt—a loyal Democrat, since gone to his reward:

If passed and branded as a Democratic measure (speaking of the Wilson bill), it would stamp us as a lot of imbeciles and our managers in both Houses as driveling idiots.

[Loud applause on the Republican side.]

"Oh, if you do not pass a tariff bill, we will!"

Now, Mr. Chairman, I must omit some things that I would like to have said.

[Cries of "Do not do it," and "Go ahead."]

Well, I think I have proven my case so far as Tom Johnson's assertion was concerned—that his party had neither the honesty nor the courage nor the ability to make a tariff law.

Now, I go a step farther and say, even if the party possessed the qualifications, it still could not make a tariff law, for the reason that it has no convictions on the subject. The general trend of the Democratic party, so far as its history discloses, is toward free trade, but it is for anything at any time that will catch the popular ear. Let us look a little into its history. The Democratic party has been for protection and against protection. It has declared protection robbery and unconstitutional. It has at times refused to declare itself at all on the subject when it thought that course was the most discreet. On one occasion, in a spirit of cowardice, it relegated to the people to say what its policies should be. Now, let us look a little at it historically.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. May I ask one other question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. While you are proposing to look at it from a historical standpoint, I would like to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. DALZELL. I was asked for a question, not for a reminder.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That the lowest tariff in American history was passed by the Republican party in 1857.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, we won't stop to discuss that proposition; the gentleman has made his reminder, now I will go on. In 1832, with Jackson and Van Buren as its Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates, it declared for protection. I read from its platform:

Resolved, That an adequate protection to American industry is indispensable to the prosperity of the country, and that an abandonment of the policy at this period would be attended with consequences ruinous to the best interests of the nation.

And then they added a tail to it that I want to call your attention to, because I want to refer to it a little later on.

Resolved, That a uniform system of internal improvements, sustained and supported by the General Government, is calculated to secure in the highest degree the harmony, the strength, and the permanency of the Republic.

That was the platform in 1832. The platform of 1840 says:

Resolved, That the Constitution does not confer upon the General Government the power to commence and carry on a general system of internal improvement.

[Laughter.]

In 1848 the platform openly avowed its adherence to free trade. It said:

Resolved, That the fruits of the great political triumph of 1844, which elected James K. Polk and George M. Dallas President and Vice-President of the United States, have fulfilled the hopes of the Democracy of the Union (reciting a number of things) in the noble impulse given to the cause of free trade by the repeal of the tariff of 1842.

In 1868 it declared for—revenue on foreign imports and such equal taxation under internal-revenue laws as will afford incidental protection.

In 1872 (now this is worth listening to), choosing as its standard bearers its old time and lifelong enemy, Horace Greeley, it was for "anything to beat Grant," and on the tariff question it said this:

Recognizing that there are in our midst honest but irreconcilable differences of opinion with regard to the respective systems of protection and free trade, we remit the discussion of the subject to the people in their Congressional districts.

[Loud applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, you know in that campaign there were some Democrats who were not willing to wallow in the mire, and, though few in numbers, they met and nominated a Presidential ticket composed of Charles O'Conor and John Quincy Adams. And I want you to have their opinion as to what they thought of the Democratic party's platform that I have just read to you. They said:

Resolved, That we proclaim to the world that principle is to be preferred to power; that the Democratic party is held together by the cohesion of the time-honored principle which they will never surrender in exchange for all the offices which Presidents can confer. The pangs of the minorities are doubtless excruciating; but we welcome an eternal minority under the banner inscribed with our principles rather than an almighty majority purchased by their abandonment.

In 1876 and in 1800 the party declared for tariff for revenue only; their present doctrine, as we all know, and as it will officially remain until they have a new national convention and renewed opportunity to turn another somersault, is that "protection is robbery."

I say that their official doctrine is that protection is robbery, so as to contradistinguish it from the doctrine of some of its leaders. The gentleman from Missouri—and there is no gentleman in this House more respected for his character and ability, Judge DE ARMOND said that "free trade is an academic dream;" but his colleague from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said, and he now resents as an insult that it should be repeated, that he "would tear down the custom-houses from turret to foundation stone." [Laughter.] The gentleman from Mississippi, popularly known as the leader of the minority, denies that he is a free trader, and yet he fills the RECORD with chapters from Bastiat, who Thomas B. Reed said was "the brightest free trader that ever charged down the line, and that he furnished the opposition with both their brains and their dialectics." And the gentleman from Mississippi treated us not only to a chapter from Bastiat, but also a chapter from Robinson Crusoe. I think that we owe him thanks that he did not give us a chapter from Mother Goose. [Laughter.]

In a recent interview, published in the Washington Post, which the gentleman from Mississippi has not denied, he said:

We will make a tariff bill—

That is what he said on the floor of the House, too—

We will make a tariff bill; it will not be an ideal tariff bill, because we must to some extent be guided by actual conditions surrounding us, which will make us swerve—to some extent from the ideal, but it will be an approximation to it.

It will, I apprehend, be such another case of swerving as was illustrated in the Wilson-Gorman bill. I very much fear that the gentleman is swerving from ideals for votes. [Laughter and applause on Republican side.]

But hearken, now, to the true Democratic doctrine from a gentleman who has the courage to stand by his guns. It is the voice of the peerless orator from New York. Says Mr. BOURKE COCKRAN:

The tariff is a scheme of plunder. Republicans do not call it that, but disguise it under mellifluous phrases. If you break the harmony of distribution of plunder, you will soon call in the police. You can not expect certain interests that have been enjoying this favoritism of plunder to give it up willingly. * * * Less than fifty years from now the speeches for protection and high tariff will sound as ridiculous as those of the beginning of the eighteenth century against exports and those against witchcraft of the century before.

The gentleman from New York wears no mask.

Democratic leaders, as you will have observed, for the most part, now deny that they are free traders, and declare for a tariff for revenue, or a revenue tariff with incidental protection.

What is a tariff for revenue?

It is a tariff or tax placed upon such articles of foreign production imported here as will produce the largest revenue with the lowest tax. Said Robert J. Walker, author of the revenue tariff of 1846:

The only true maxim is that which experience demonstrates will bring in each case the largest revenue at the lowest rate of duty, and that no duty be imposed on any article above the lowest rate which will yield the largest amount of revenue.

Will you tell me how many of your industries would survive a tariff of that character? Will you tell me how many mills would continue to operate, how many furnaces would be in blast, how many looms would continue their hum, how many farms would compete with the cheaper labor and the illimitable cheaper lands across the Canadian border? Will you tell me how you would house and feed the hundreds of thousands of idle workmen, their wives and their little ones?

God forbid that our eyes shall ever see the day of a tariff for revenue only. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM. Before the gentleman proceeds further will he permit me to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who interrupted him a few moments ago, how he figures out that the Republican party made a tariff law in 1857, when we did not come into power until 1861?

Mr. DALZELL. That is easy for a Democrat.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will answer.

Mr. DALZELL. No, I can not yield just now.

But some of our Democratic friends say, "we are not for a revenue tariff, but for a revenue tariff with incidental protection."

Well, why not for a revenue tariff? "Oh," says the gentleman from Mississippi, "we can not tear down the existing structure overnight."

He does not propose to strangle our industries, he only proposes to kill them by slow poison.

He says "we can not tear down the structure overnight," and for that reason it would seem he is not for a revenue tariff. And yet a revenue tariff, the gentleman says, is the best tariff that this country ever saw, and that under the revenue tariff of 1846 we had the best times that we ever had, which is not true. Then why not a revenue tariff? Why has the gentleman not the courage of his convictions? If he believes what he says, then he is hoist with his own petard.

Incidental protection! Humbug and pretense! An insult to all reason and logic! If protection be robbery, then the difference between real protection and protection incidental or accidental is a difference only in degree. Both go down before the same argument. No ingenuity of reasoning can draw a distinction. It is only the difference between highway robbery and petty larceny. As for me, if it be a case of robbery at all, I have a qualified respect for the audacity and courage of the highwayman, but nothing but contempt for the sneak thief—and pretty much the same feeling for his advocate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

How much incidental protection do you propose to give? Enough to save the industry? Then your protection is not incidental but real. Less than enough to save the industry? Then your protection is a sham, and you might as well have the courage to avow it and take the consequences.

Mr. Chairman, we are a great, practical people. We look around us and see that all the nations in the civilized world, save one, avow and practice the policy of protection. It seems to us that the wisdom of all these nations is greater than the wisdom of one. Over and against the names of Bastiat and Cobden and Adam Smith we put the name of that masterful intellect, Germany's great iron chancellor, Prince Bismarck, who in the German Reichstag, on May 14, 1882, said this:

> The success of the United States in material development is the most illustrious of modern times. The American nation has not only successfully borne and suppressed the most gigantic and expensive war of all history, but immediately afterwards it disbanded its army, found employment for all its soldiers and marines, paid off most of its debt, gave labor and homes to all the unemployed of Europe as fast as they could arrive within its territory, and all by a system of taxation so indirect as not to be perceived, much less felt. Because it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is due to its system of protective laws, I urge that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff system of the United States.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, we are a great, practical people. We are not accustomed to take our economics from college professors and the dreamers of other times, amidst now obsolete conditions. We do not read our tariff lessons out of books; we read them by the blazing light of open furnace doors, amid the noise of industrial activities, and in the sweat of our brows that we coin into wealth. And God help the man or the party that would put out those fires, still the music of that noise, and send the workman home to a foodless and hungry household. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.] For, after all, Mr. Chairman, the question of protection is only a question of labor. It is the man who works that is its beneficiary, his wife and his children, and their future. It is, in the last analysis, the question of an adequate wage, measuring up to the severe demands of manhood citizenship. It is a question in which we are all interested, on that side of the House as well as on this. I would to God that we could clasp hands across that aisle in the common cause of the American workingman.

> Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet
> Till earth and sky stand presently at God's great judgment seat.
> But there is neither East nor West, Border, nor Breed nor Birth,
> When two strong men stand face to face, though they come from the ends of the earth.

[Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6134) providing for the conveyance to the State of North Dakota of certain tracts of land for the use and benefit of the North Dakota State Historical Society, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19432), to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I shall try to call up the bill at an early season.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the preparation of reports and material to enable the Secretary of State to utilize and carry on the work partly performed by the Joint High Commission of 1898, etc., intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 to continue the demarcation of the boundary line between the United States and Canada, intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1291) for the relief of James W. Watson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INTRODUCTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Rules, I report an amendment to the rules, and give notice that I shall call it up as early as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution reported by the committee.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate resolution 8, by Mr. LODGE, giving notice that "in accordance with the provision of Rule XL, I propose an amendment to the rules which will modify Rule VII." Strike out after the resolving clause and insert:

"Senators having petitions, memorials, pension bills, bills for the payment of private claims or for the correction of naval or military records to present after the morning hour may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their name and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions, memorials, and bills shall, with the approval of the presiding officer, be entered on the Journal, with the names of the Senators presenting them, as having been read twice and referred to the appropriate committees, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of debates for publication in the RECORD.

"It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor, for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator."

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that the report of a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will go to the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the Calendar.

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESSES.

Mr. MILLARD. From the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I report certain matter relative to the questions of law arising on the motion to require a witness to answer each and every one of the questions propounded to him before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. I move that the papers be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

ISSUANCE OF SUBPŒNAS.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill (S. 5769) to declare the true intent and meaning of parts of the act entitled "An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission," etc., approved February 11, 1893, and an act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1903, was inadvertently and improperly referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I move that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 6278) granting an increase of pension to Henry Humble; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6279) for the relief of the estate of George E. House, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DRYDEN introduced a bill (S. 6280) granting an increase of pension to David B. Husted; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6281) granting an increase of pension to Joseph C. Bowker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 6282) for the relief of the trustees of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Mulberry, Crawford County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CRANE introduced a bill (S. 6283) granting an increase of pension to Clara A. R. Devereux; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6284) granting a pension to Anna A. Foster; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 6285) to remove the restrictions on the alienation of lands in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 6286) granting an increase of pension to John Wood; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NEWLANDS introduced a bill (S. 6287) for the formation of national corporations for railroad and navigation lines engaged in interstate and foreign commerce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (S. 6288) to create a new division of the western judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Del Rio, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 6289) for the relief of Mary E. Pillow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 6290) for the relief of Elizabeth L. W. Bailey, administratrix of the estate of Davis W. Bailey, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,007.20 to pay Thomas H. Kent, or his heirs, for money actually expended by him in causing to be made the survey known as the "Bundock survey" on lands formerly within the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment relative to the promotion of assistant paymasters of the Navy, after three years' service, to the grade of passed assistant paymaster, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposihg to appropriate $13,663.51 to pay certain postmasters in Colorado, or their heirs, the difference between their salaries as computed and the salaries allowed them as set out in Senate Document No. 401, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $49,000 for the construction of a chapel, recreation hall, and fittings at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 18537—the agricultural appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18537) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yesterday afternoon when the committee amendment beginning at line 24, page 21, was reached the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked that it be passed over, as he wished to address the Senate upon it. I ask that the amendment on page 21 be now taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee at page 21 will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points of export as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as the evidence at hand may warrant.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me to make a brief statement concerning a matter which appears in the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield with pleasure, Mr. President.

Mr. FULTON. In discussing yesterday evening, just prior to adjournment, a pending amendment providing for the payment from the proceeds of the forest reserves a certain per cent to the counties in the States where the reserves are situated, I submitted a few observations, and the report of my remarks is so inaccurate as to be misleading. I desire simply to correct those inaccuracies. I should state, however, that I do not attach any blame to the reporters because of the error, for I recall that at that time there was considerable confusion in the Chamber, and it is not surprising that they did not get an accurate report.

At one place I am reported as having said that these withdrawals of land for reserve purposes were made by the States, which, of course, is not correct. They are made by the General Government. But this is the particular paragraph to which I call attention and which I wish to correct:

It is stated on page 7549 of this morning's RECORD that I said the average product of timber is from twelve to seventeen thousand feet, board measure, per acre, and that the average price would probably be about $1 per thousand stumpage—that is, for the tree as it stands in the forest—which would be "$17 per acre for fifty years," leaving the inference that it would pay $17 per acre per annum for fifty years.

As a matter of fact, what I stated was that probably a fair average would be 17,000 feet, board measure, per acre of timber, and that while many areas of timber would produce much more largely than that, taken as a whole, the timbered region would probably average that in the States of Oregon and Washington. I should rather put it this way: The timber being removed, it would not be renewed in less than fifty years, and the 17,000 feet would be the only return on an acre of timbered land during a period of fifty years. Ten per cent of that is proposed by the committee amendment to be paid to the counties where the forest reserves are located. Ten per cent of that would be $1.70, and instead of yielding $1.70 per acre for fifty years, it would be $1.70 per acre in a period of fifty years, which is a very different proposition. That is the correction I wish to make.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the amendment on pages 21 and 22 of the bill proposes—

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points of export as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, $15,000 is allowed to cover the expenses, and he is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment is the rather weak result of an effort on my part to enlist the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and also the attention of the Senate, to grave abuses that have been sustained by the agricultural section of Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, South Dakota, and to some extent, Nebraska.

I have made an earnest effort, Mr. President, to bring this matter before the attention of Congress, and to secure legislative enactment for the purpose of curing the great wrongs which are now inflicted upon a portion of our public.

I hope that no point of order will be made upon this amendment. I assume possibly that a point of order will lie. The amendment is in the right direction. It is facing Congress and Congressional action toward a matter of vast importance to every one of these States. It is a step, I may say, in the right direction, but it is a step of an inch when in fact it ought to be one of a mile.

It is no easy thing, Mr. President, for a representative of the Dakotas to stand by and for years see from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 filched out of the inhabitants of his State by reason of an unjust system of grading and inspection of grain at a terminal point over which that State has no jurisdiction whatever. It is extremely hard when I couple with that knowledge the further knowledge that there is a simple and speedy and a full and adequate remedy against a continuance of this evil.

Mr. President, we had a discussion yesterday upon the matter of paternalism by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I think that I am as much opposed to the extension of any power that is paternalistic in the slightest degree as the Senator from Maine can possibly be. I am not unmindful, however, of the clear provision in our Constitution that Congress shall have power over interstate commerce. I am not unmindful of the fact that the power therein granted has resulted in the greatest blessing to all of the people of the United States by a judicious exercise of the power by Congress. We have heard in connection with that, and will hear again, the matter of State rights, and whether the exercise of the power of Congress under this provision is inimical to the rights of the States themselves.

There is but one safe ground that can be taken by Congress under its authority to regulate interstate commerce and the State under its authority to regulate its own internal affairs, and that position is that each one of these sovereign powers shall so exercise the power within its own authority that it shall be in harmony with the authority exercised by the other power. It is to harmonize the differences between the State authority and the constitutional authority that we may secure the best results and avoid the danger of Congress attempting to override those things which are peculiarly and should be peculiarly within the province of the several States.

I appreciate, Mr. President, the good intent of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which has sought by this amendment to apply a correction to some of the evils that are complained of. But the amendment which the committee proposes does not go far enough. It simply provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, through his Department, may take samples of our grain that is to be exported, and, taking them to the proper laboratory, may examine them, and then may determine what the grade ought to be given for that grain. But that is kept peculiarly within his own knowledge under the amendment, and therefore no effectiveness is given to the law.

Now, what object is there in such a law? The prime object is to meet the complaint that we are sending out to foreign countries grades of grain that are fraudulent, and thereby discredit our grain in the foreign markets of the world. The effect of that discrediting is to reduce the price which will be paid there, and that reduction necessarily reacts and reduces the price that is to be paid at the place of initial sale and the place of production.

I have introduced a bill to remedy the whole matter, and that bill provides that the Federal Government at the principal terminal points may inspect and grade the grain that is the subject of interstate or foreign commerce. When it has done this the grade has a national character, a national inspection, a national certificate that will follow the consignment of grain wherever it may go in this country and into any other country to which it is consigned. It will cure a multitude of abuses which I am constrained to discuss at this time for the reason that that bill has never been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and this proposed amendment allows me the only opportunity to lay before the Senate the great wrongs that are being complained of by the people whom I in part represent.

Why has not that bill been favorably reported, Mr. President? I will state the reason. We have fallen into a habit—and I deprecate that habit as much as anyone can—of allowing our legislation to be practically dictated by the several Departments of the Government. When our ancestors established this great Government, they intended that Congress should be the legislative branch of the Government. They created these great Departments for no other purpose than to properly carry on the executive business of the Government and to furnish Congress information which might guide it in all future legislation. It was never intended at that time that Congress should bow its head meekly to every suggestion that should be made by the Departments as to what legislation they desired, or that it should surrender its legislative functions of considering and determining what ought to be legislation simply because it did not harmonize with the idea of the head of a Department. This new innovation is doubly pernicious when we consider that under the present system, when we send down to a Department from any of these committees to get advice upon any proposition, the letter of inquiry is generally sent to some clerk who looks over the records and determines what ought to be done, and secures the signature of the head of the Department, and that letter comes to us then as a guide and an instruction of what the Congress of the United States shall do in the enactment of laws. So that a $900 or a $1,200 clerk to a certain extent may govern and control the legislation which we enact here.

Everyone knows, as I know, that the moment we receive from one of those clerks a letter which purports to come from the head of the Department, if it is antagonistic to any proposition it simply throws a cold chill over such proposed legislation. Senators are getting into the habit, and I deprecate that habit, and I think they do, also, of first wanting to know what the Department has to say; and if the Department does not make a favorable and a strong report they simply lay the matter aside as hardly worthy of consideration, and bother themselves very little about it after that.

In this case a clerk of the Department thinks that the proposed legislation is unnecessary. Why? Because the same party who dictates the letter has had a scheme of his own, I might almost say a hobby of his own, which he thinks may be better, or will take the place of the bill I introduced; and because of that, to a great extent, we have not had that earnest and full consideration in the committee which I think this important provision demands.

Mr. President, I introduced testimony laying before that committee the reasons for the demand of this general legislation, and every matter that I thought would clearly and concisely explain it. That testimony, printed in a Senate document, has never been answered before that committee. Not one syllable, not a line of it, has been answered. There has been a little statement of two or three lines, that there are many good things in this provision, but the Department is not quite ready for it. In addition there are many resolutions, undoubtedly from boards of trade who are fattening under the present system at the expense of the farmer producer, and who naturally can see no virtue in any change whatever.

Now, I am earnestly trying to get this matter to be considered by Congress. There are just as good men, as intellectual men, I hope, in the Senate of the United States, who can consider and conscientiously determine, under their oath and upon their good judgment, what is proper legislation, as you can find in any Department.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. Some of the Senators on this side are becoming quite interested in the very earnest discussion by the Senator from North Dakota, but we are in the dark as to what it is he really desires and as to what his amendment is. That we may follow the Senator more intelligently, will he kindly state what his amendment is and the immediate object to be attained?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not seek in discussing this matter to ask at this time that we shall go to the extent of the full remedy which is demanded, because that requires full and careful consideration as a separate measure. The amendment which I now offer is an amendment to the amendment of the committee. The Secretary of Agriculture is given authority already by the amendment of the committee to take samples of exports and analyze them and determine the grade and character. I want to go further and ask the same person who examines and passes upon that to issue a certificate as coming from this Department of the United States, which certificate shall state the number of bushels consigned, approximately, the consignor, the consignee, the ship in which it is taken, and giving the kind and grade and quality of that grain. Such certificate to be issued in duplicate, one to be delivered to the consignor or shipper, the other to be delivered to the consignee or purchaser, to the end that the purchaser may know what he is getting and that he will get a grade that will conform to what it purports to be.

Mr. CLAPP. May I interrupt the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood the Senator to say that he is not asking at this time all that he has in view. Does he ask an amendment to the bill covering the last point presented?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; but in order to explain the one, it is necessary that I shall go more or less fully into the subject.

Mr. CLAPP. It might be well to have the amendment read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I had the amendment read last evening.

Mr. CLAPP. But at that time a great many Senators were out of the Chamber.

Mr. McCUMBER. At the suggestion of the Senator, I would be glad to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I will ask the Senator a question.

The SECRETARY. On page 22 of the bill, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by adding, after the word "warrant," in line 9, the following words——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the amendment as reported by the committee should be first read and then the amendment proposed by my colleague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will first read the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry report as an amendment, to insert on page 21, after line 23, the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points of export as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as the evidence at hand may warrant.

To this the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] proposes to add the following:

The officer or employee obtaining such sample or parcel for examination shall ascertain the necessary facts and make and sign a certificate showing that the same is made under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, certifying the date and fact of such inspection, the approximate number of bushels in each consignment, the vessel in which the same is exported, the consignor or shipper, the consignee or purchaser, the provision of law under which such certificate is made, the kind, quality, and also grade of such grain or seed, its condition at the time of shipment, as ascertained by such examination, and any other facts which may be proper to clearly indicate its character. Such certificate shall be issued in duplicate, one to be mailed to the shipper or consignor, the other to the purchaser or consignee.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. This thought is suggested by the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota. As I understand him, his object, in short, is to secure from the Government a certificate as to the quantity, character, and quality of grain; that is to follow the article wherever the grain may go, if it is the subject of interstate commerce, to be used by the vendor and the vendee for fixing quality, quantity, etc., in the purchase and sale.

Is there any reason why such a provision should not attach to every article that is the subject of interstate commerce? Is there any reason why the Government should not be called in to give its certificate to every kind of commodity, whether the product of the field or of the shop, and that everything should be bought and sold upon the certificate of the Government?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. This does not apply to an interstate matter any more than an intrastate matter. It is simply an examination at the point of entry, for instance, New York or Boston.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer the Senator——

Mr. PATTERSON. Then my question might be modified so as to meet products of any kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can answer it, Mr. President.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was asking why, then, the Government can not take supervision of anything and everything in order that no swindling may occur and that every transaction may be an honest one?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is a very great reason. The Government should make laws only where there is a demand for laws. People should be practically free to conduct their business without restrictions, unless conditions arise which render those restrictions absolutely necessary. That is a proposition that should apply in all cases. I admit that we have altogether too many laws sometimes; but when for years it has been demonstrated that the grossest character of fraud is connected with and follows a certain line of business, which fraud is inimical to the interests of a large portion of the public, then it becomes the moral duty of the sovereign power, which can pass the law which can apply the correction, to apply it for the protection of the people. That is why it applies to this case, and does not and should not apply to all other cases. When the same deceit, when the same fraud applies to other conditions, then we should apply the same law by the proper sovereign power, be it State or be it Federal. But when a single State like my own, by a system of long-prevailing fraudulent inspection loses every year from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, which belongs to the laborers upon our farms, then it becomes the duty, if that condition has lasted so long as to demonstrate its permanency, of the Government, that has the power to abate the wrong, to take steps to do so. I think that should be an answer to the query of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Let us understand these conditions; and I will explain them as briefly as I can. What is the system of which we are complaining? Remember that every bushel of wheat that goes to market in western Minnesota, in North Dakota, and in the greater portion of South Dakota, I think, finds its first place of sale in the cities of Minneapolis and Duluth, in Minnesota, and in Superior, Wis. Remember that we can not control the grain which we have shipped after it has crossed the Red River of the North; that it then falls under the jurisdiction and under the laws of another State.

The State of Minnesota has a grain and warehouse commission, I think it is termed. Under the laws of that State that commission is given certain powers in the matter of the grading and inspection of grain. A chief inspector is appointed, and that chief inspector appoints his deputy. If an appeal be taken from the grading or from the inspection of grain made by the deputy, the appeal necessarily goes to the principal who appoints him. The principal, who appoints that deputy, is, as I am informed, in nearly every instance placed there by the predominating influence of the grain elevator companies. He then is more the representative of those great terminal elevators than he is of the producers of that grain. I repeat, when an appeal is taken from the deputy it goes to the chief. The interest of the chief is to sustain the action of the deputy, if possible. The relief from such an appeal, therefore, amounts practically to nothing.

The great terminal elevator companies have lines of elevators throughout the States of Minnesota and North Dakota. They instruct their purchasers and their agents stationed on those lines as to what grades they shall give; and they will give no other grades. Then, when the grain comes through another source, as we in North Dakota ship a great deal in carload lots, it falls into the hands of these same inspectors; and they, as a rule, as shown by the report of a legislative committee of that State, during the early period of the movement of grain, inspect and grade it, resolving every doubt in favor of the terminal elevator company as against the producer of the grain. The result of that is that two-thirds of the grain from those great States is shipped and disposed of and sold at a grade or two less than properly belongs to it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

Then, two-thirds of that grain lies in the terminal elevator until later in the season, when the grades are all raised, after the farmer has got rid of the greater part of his grain, and the terminal elevators receive a higher price for their own grain, which they have bought at a grade lower.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to ask the Senator under what system is this elevator commission to which he has referred in his remarks appointed?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is appointed, as I explained, under the laws of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PATTERSON. But who appoints them?

Mr. McCUMBER. The appointment of the chief inspector, I think, is made by the governor.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Any error I make the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will correct, as he knows more about it than I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to ask the Senator whether he is attacking the integrity of the commission, which exists under the law for the purpose of the inspection of the grades of wheat?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will have to draw his own conclusion as to who or what is attacked. The system is wrong; the system is unjust; the system works for the benefit of the purchaser and against the benefit of the producer.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. I had not anticipated that this question was coming up this morning, and so I am not prepared with any figures to dispute any of the charges made by the Senator from North Dakota; but I can not sit here and hear the officials of my own State arraigned in this matter and in this manner without protest. From all I can learn, they have established a grade in Minnesota which gives the standard wherever wheat is sold. It is a grade which is recognized in Liverpool.

The chief inspector under the present law, I think, is appointed by the commission, and the commission, I think, is now elected, though it was formerly an appointive commission. Of course, as I have said, I am not prepared with figures to meet at this time these charges, but it seems to me a most unwarranted procedure to arraign officials of a State in this manner, and I protest against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the figures to sustain every proposition that I will make, and I have the judicial decision of Judge Sanborn, whom the Senator respects, I think, as much as any man, in which he again and again asserts the corruption of the system, and the Senator will listen to it before I am through with this argument. I have the figures, which I have given before in an address and which I can give again, showing the workings of the system. The figures are taken from the reports of the State grain and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota, showing that there are three times as many bushels—I think that is approximately correct—of the higher grade of wheat sold out of the elevators as are taken into the elevators, and about one-third more of the number of bushels of the lower grades sold out of the elevators than are taken into those elevators. I can give the Senator the figures if he desires them.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Do I understand the Senator to say that Judge Sanborn has charged corruption upon the men who administer the law in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to read the decision of Judge Sanborn, and then the Senator can see what the judge says; it will speak for itself, and it is a most important legal document. It is alive with condemnation of this system, which it again and again characterizes as fraudulent. The Senator will receive it all. I will give no figures at all here to-day, but I have them, and the Senator can read them at any time. I will furnish them to him if he wishes to see them.

Now, Mr. President, I want to go a little further and show the system here, so that Senators can see the injury which we are suffering.

In addition to this we have our mixing elevators at the terminals. These mixing elevators will take, we will say, a million bushels of No. 1 northern and 3,000,000 bushels of No. 2 northern, mix them together, and then they are graded as No. 1 northern and the whole mass shipped to Liverpool or to Marseille or to some other place. The consignee receives the shipments; the miller receives them. He finds they do not conform to the standard laid down by the laws of Minnesota. Serious complaint is made to that cargo of wheat on the ground of fraud. The consignee knows that wheat is sold by grade, and not by inspection. The purchaser makes serious complaint against our American wheat and declares it to be inferior to Canadian wheat of the same grade that is raised and purchased cross the line.

Another trouble is that the producer of the grain, the farmer, in my State and in South Dakota and in other States, has no voice whatever in determining the personnel of the commission or the personnel of the chief inspector or his deputies who are to pass upon his grain. They may inspect it as No. 3 northern, when it is entitled to be graded as No. 1. They may take out 4 pounds per bushel for dockage, when, as a matter of fact, they should not have taken out to exceed half a pound. It is estimated that in ten year 26,000,000 bushels more were sold out of the elevators at the great terminals which I have mentioned than were taken in during the same time. Somebody got the benefit of that 26,000,000 bushels of grain, and it was not the men who raised it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Can my colleague state what was the grade of that wheat?

Mr. McCUMBER. That many more bushels were taken out than were put in, independent of grade. That amount was taken out in ten years, and from the best evidence I can secure they sold out that much more than was taken in, according to the weight rendered by them to the farmer.

In addition to that, this dockage is a most important element, because the farmer pays the freight on everything that is taken out, though he gets no benefit from it. What is done with this dockage? If any is taken out at all, it belongs to the purchaser, and it is ground and sold for practically as much as the better part of the grain from which it was extracted is sold. Therein is another great injury.

Mr. President, how may this be remedied? It can be remedied by a national inspection, because if national inspectors were appointed at these great terminals—and it would not be necessary to have them at more than twenty-five different places—they would be free from political influence of every character whatever. If they should prove to be inefficient they could be removed; if they should turn out to be not the proper persons for one place they could be sent somewhere else, where they could do better work. We would have a complete remedy against present conditions. Proper provision could be made for appeal in case any wrong was committed. Under such a system the owners of elevator lines could not instruct their purchasers not to grade higher than a certain figure, because it would soon be demonstrated that they were giving an unfair grade, and they could not long continue business while they were doing that if it were known or means of determining it were to be had. In addition, there would be no inducement for the national inspectors to resolve every doubt in favor of the terminal elevator and against the farmer who produces the grain.

Under national inspection it would be impossible, I believe, to ship out three times as much of a certain grade as is taken in. When I say three times, I am using the term approximately, and not attempting to use it to demonstrate the exact proportion. Under such a system the buyer, by controlling the personnel of the board, would have his remedy. He could appeal to his Congressman, and the Congressman could go to the State Department. He would have some way of having his voice heard and having his statements listened to in reference to anything that was wrong in the system which might be in vogue at any particular time. The producer of North and South Dakota has not the slightest voice now in determining the personnel of the inspecting boards, nor has he any voice in effecting a remedy against any wrong.

Mr. President, under the national system it would be impossible to secure false certificates as to grades so as to assist in gambling. I have evidence on that point from a member of the board in Superior, who says he will give the very numbers of the cars to show that they have been manipulated in a number of different instances.

Now, about the feasibility. Is it a simple proposition? If a State can do the work through its officers, if a board of trade can do its own inspecting and grade the grain through the force it employs, what on earth would prevent the Government from taking similar forces and operating the same as the others do, except that the operations there would be justly and fairly conducted and without any political influence to bias the officers in their labors? I could go on to a considerable extent in this line, Mr. President, but I do not care to cover the whole field that might be considered upon the simple proposition of this amendment.

Mr. President, what has been attempted heretofore? Years ago both the State of North Dakota and the State of Wisconsin acting jointly, attempted to see what could be done to change these conditions. Two years ago, I think it was, the legislature of the State of Wisconsin enacted a law to cure these defects. They provided against the wrongful grading, against mixing, and against the other offenses from which our people were suffering. They also attempted to appoint, under a State law, a representative upon their board from the State of North Dakota and another from the State of New York, that they might act in harmony to secure honest grades from the Dakotas, to secure honest grades in the export of grain from the terminal places in the State of New York—Buffalo and the city of New York.

That law was attacked. The moment they tried to put it in force the Duluth Board of Trade counteracted on them. They first made rules and regulations forbidding any person belonging to that board from dealing in grain under the Wisconsin statute; they made it a criminal offense, so far as a board can make a matter a criminal offense, and subjected the members of that board to discharge if any one of them should buy or sell grain under the Wisconsin law. They attempted to meet it in that way. A conflict immediately arose between the boards in the State of Minnesota and the officials in Wisconsin. It was a long struggle, and even went to the extent of physical force. I have a letter here from the secretary of the Board of Trade of Superior, Wis., and I ask the Secretary to read that portion of the letter which I have marked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

I am ordered by our board of directors to give you a concise statement of the operations of the Wisconsin grain-inspection law so far.

The elevator and grain ring, with the Duluth Board of Trade, are putting up a desperate fight. Everything short of actual war has been resorted to to defeat the law. They have been defeated at every point, but they are appealing case after case, deferring the inevitable, and they can not stave it off much longer. Elevators have been boarded up and stairways torn out to prevent entrance of Wisconsin officers and inspecting and weighing, and in some instances officers have forcibly entered elevators. But we must await the action of the courts.

State fees have been paid into court and tied up, and public-spirited citizens have been compelled to advance money to the Wisconsin grain and warehouse commissioners to pay their employees, although the department has earned several thousand dollars in excess of expenditures.

Rumblings of compromise are heard, providing the commissioners are changed. It is suggested that had the commissioners been named as suggested by the grain ring no contest had been necessary.

Mr. McCUMBER. That indicates some of the trouble. Here I have a clipping from a Wisconsin paper, which I also ask to have read at this time in connection with this matter to show the intensity of feeling in the struggle between the Minnesota system and the board and that of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask these questions because it has been several years since I have been associated with the State government of Minnesota, and I do not know what legislation there may have been of late. Is wheat now inspected at Superior?

Mr. McCUMBER. No. Under the present system there has been no change in the laws of Minnesota. Wheat is inspected at Sandstone, a distance of some 8 miles before it reaches Superior; then it is sold under the Minnesota system. The large terminal elevators at Superior are working in harmony with the Minnesota inspection law, because they get the same benefit out of this Minnesota inspection law as the other terminal elevators.

Mr. CLAPP. Has Wisconsin a State inspection law?

Mr. McCUMBER. It has a State inspection law.

Mr. CLAPP. Why do they not enforce that law? I am asking this because, as I say, it is some years since I have been familiar with the legal phase of the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is almost impossible to enforce it for the reasons that have been given. The great terminal elevators in Duluth and in Superior that are dealing with grain on the Minnesota basis also declined to comply with the laws of the State of Wisconsin, and brought the matter into court. It is upon this case that Judge Sanborn rendered his opinion. The action was brought by an elevator company in Superior against the warehouse commission, or the board, in the State of Wisconsin that enforces that law, and certain railway companies. I will reach that presently and it will be explained. I will say to the Senator that in the decision, which I will have read——

Mr. CLAPP. What was the effect of the decision?

Mr. McCUMBER. The law was declared unconstitutional, as being an unlawful interference with interstate trade.

I ask the Secretary to read the clipping which I send to the desk, lately cut from a paper at Superior, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PITCHED BATTLE OVER GRAIN INSPECTION.

SUPERIOR, WIS., December 7.

A pitched battle was fought at the Cargill elevator, in this city, between two Wisconsin inspection officials and five men from the steamer Rollins and the elevator. Legal complications of a serious nature will probably result from the encounter.

According to the story of those who saw the affair, the inspectors were on the defensive throughout the fight. The men were sent to the elevator to weigh some grain out on the steamer Rollins, and the objection of the superintendent of the elevator and the officers of the boat to their presence on the premises caused the fight.

The Wisconsin inspectors went ahead and took a number of samples in spite of the threats of violence with which they were forced to contend. Things began to look black, however, before they had finished the job, and, concluding that discretion was the better part of valor, they prepared to take what samples they had secured and take to their heels.

The opposition was willing to have them retreat, but was not in favor of having the Wisconsin people carry away the samples. The inspectors were told that they must leave the grain. They sent back an ultimatum to the effect that they would see the vessel men and Superintendent McManus "in hell first," and then left hurriedly for headquarters.

Their retreat was cut off, however, and a party detached from the elevator caught them.

The Wisconsin inspectors allege that they were threatened with knives by their captors. Whether this is true or not, it is a fact that their samples were taken from them and cut and slashed until they were of no value. The inspectors were delayed so that they did not reach the offices of the commission until late in the night.

Yesterday morning a formal complaint was filed against the parties who took the samples with the district attorney. The latter will commence a case immediately, with a view to punishing those responsible for the treatment of the inspectors.

President Andrew, of the commission, stated to-day that he considered the attack an outrage against law and order, and that the matter would certainly not be passed by lightly so far as the commission was concerned. He also stated that a force of men large enough to take samples from the boats would be sent to all the elevators, and that the inspection laws of the State, as well as other laws, were to be rigidly enforced. If Mr. Andrew's inspectors are unable to bring away their samples it is intimated that the governor will be asked to provide militia to aid in enforcing the law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Minnesota seemed to think that possibly I was doing an injustice to the Minnesota system, I wish to call his attention to the fact that there is a grain growers' association of the States of Minnesota, South Dakota, and North Dakota, representing the farmers of those three States. That grain growers' association has among its members those who have given this subject a great deal of consideration, and they join with me as they have before joined in every effort that has been made to escape the tyranny of that system as I have given it. They believe that they are not used right. The figures, which are indisputable, show that they are correct.

I now desire to have read the resolution by the Tri-State Grain Growers' Association of these three States, adopted at their last meeting, in January. Their complaint is not without merit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' Association passed the following resolution unanimously January 19, 1906:

"Whereas Senator McCUMBER, of this State, has introduced a bill in the United States Congress to provide for a national inspection and for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, flax, corn, oats, barley, rye, and other grains, and for other purposes; and

"Whereas the personal experience of the farmers of the Northwest has shown the necessity of a measure of this kind; and

"Whereas such a law would not only give the producer the grade to which he is entitled, but would make it so that the purchaser could rely on the quality of the grain bought in whatever market it might be obtained: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we hereby heartily indorse the principle proposed in this bill, and ask Congress to speedily pass the same, that we may obtain relief from the injustice which we suffer under the present existing conditions."

I certify that the above resolution is correct as passed by the Tri-State Grain and Stock Growers' Association, of Fargo, N. Dak., January 19, 1906.

J. A. JOHNSON, Secretary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have here a most important document, not only from a legal standpoint, but also from the standpoint of a fair consideration of this subject. I have a judicial review upon evidence adduced before the court and the findings of fact of the court as embodied in its judgment, which is of great importance. I will ask that this opinion be printed as a Senate document, and, in addition, ask that the Secretary read those portions of the opinion which I have marked. It is important because it goes thoroughly into the legal question and also deals with the injustice of the present system. I will ask the Senate's kind attention while it is being read.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator state the date of the decision?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was an action——

Mr. PATTERSON. When was it rendered?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was rendered the 20th day of April.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Circuit court of the United States for the western district of Wisconsin. Globe Elevator Company, complainant, v. Homer Andrew, M. F. Swanston, John D. Shanahan, Byron Kimball, Peter S. Christenson, Great Northern Railway Company, and Northern Pacific Railway Company, defendants.

OPINION ON MOTION FOR TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

Crossbill of the Great Northern Railway Company was brought against the complainant and all the other defendants.

In the city of Superior, Wis., lying in the extreme northwest corner of the State and separated from the city of Duluth, in Minnesota, only by a navigable waterway, there are fifteen large elevators and six flouring mills. The flouring mills have a capacity of about 75,000 bushels of wheat per day, or about 20,000,000 bushels per year. Part of the product of these mills is marketed in Wisconsin and the balance is shipped to other States east of Wisconsin. The Great Northern Railroad extends from Minnesota into Wisconsin a few miles south of Superior and runs northeasterly through the city of Superior and thence to Duluth. The Northern Pacific Railway has a terminus at Duluth, and extends thence into Superior and east to Ashland, Wis. The St. Paul and Duluth Railroad, controlled by the Northern Pacific Railway Company, branches at West Duluth, about due west from the center of the city of Superior, one branch extending to Duluth and the other across the St. Louis River to Superior. The Omaha Railway Company also extends from Minnesota into Wisconsin to Superior and Duluth, branching at Spooner, about 60 miles southeast of Superior. All of these railroads carry grain, a large part of it being carried by the Great Northern company. The latter company has very large yards at Superior. The grain trade carried on all these roads amounts to about 40,000,000 bushels a year.

Prior to the enactment of chapter 19 of the laws of Wisconsin for 1905, and for a period of about ten years, inspectors and weighmen, acting under the authority of the railroad and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota, had inspected and weighed all grain received in Superior, many of these men coming from the city of Duluth daily for the purpose of doing this work. Being outside of the jurisdiction of their appointment and the jurisdiction of the laws under which they were appointed, they were not subject to any official oath, nor were they amenable to any law prescribing their duties or punishing the failure to perform them properly. Under this system, as might well be expected, grave abuses in the grain trade had grown up, and under such circumstances the legislature of the State of Wisconsin passed the law in question.

The testimony further shows that, according to the reports of the railroad and warehouse commission, more grain was reported and certified as having been shipped out of Duluth and Superior than was received into these cities, after deducting from the grain received the grain that was milled or ground into flour and other food products, one witness placing the amount at 26,000,000 bushels for the ten years from 1893 to 1902, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was in hopes that the Senator from Minnesota would listen to just that portion, as it corroborates my statement as to the extra number of bushels sold in ten years in addition to the number of bushels received. Twenty-six million is given there.

The Secretary read as follows:

The testimony shows that this was brought about partly by docking all grain that arrived in the city from one-half to 7 or 8 pounds per bushel, whereas there was no dockage on grain shipped out of the city. There was also an arbitrary dockage in weights of grain going into the elevators of one-half bushel per car. There was also an undergrading of grain as it arrived in the city of Superior and Duluth and an overgrading of the same grain when it was shipped out of these cities, the reports of the railroad and warehouse commission showing that a less number of bushels of the higher or best grades was received in than was shipped out and a larger number of bushels of the lower or poorer grades was received in than was shipped out. The price of grain is fixed by grades. Consequently when grain is received into Superior at a low grade and shipped out at a high grade the seller of the grain arriving in Superior receives a less price than the purchaser pays for the same grain when it is shipped out, the profits, of course, belonging to the middleman—the elevator company.

This in part was the situation as shown by the evidence when chapter 19, laws of 1905, was passed by the legislature, and the legislature had these and other facts before them at the time of the passage of the act.

It further appears that the Great Northern Railway has for many years transported large quantities of grain, exceeding in value $1,000,000 a year, from its railroad terminus in Superior to steamboats plying on the Great Lakes for the purpose of further transportation to eastern markets and foreign countries. In order to facilitate such commerce it built large terminal railway yards and transfer and storage appliances and equipments, as well as two large elevators. It is and for many years has been engaged in transporting wheat, flax, oats, barley, rye, and corn received from shippers along its line in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Minnesota, considerable of which grain being delivered by it into elevators in Superior. Prior to the enactment of chapter 19, 1905, cars arriving over the Great Northern usually came early in the morning. They were stopped in the yard, which is from 2 to 8 miles from the elevators and mills to which considerable grain is finally delivered by the railway company, and the grain was there inspected by persons acting for the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota under the Minnesota act of 1885. Grades were made, called "Minnesota grades," which were exhibited on the board of trade at Duluth, a body of about 300 members, and the grain was there bought and sold for delivery either in Superior at some elevator or mill or, to some extent, for delivery in Duluth. The cars remained in the yard during the day awaiting disposition pursuant to such sales, and the disposition of the day's shipments were not made until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. By this time the cars were made up into trains for delivery either at the Great Northern elevators for shipment to Duluth, to some extent, or for delivery to the Superior Terminal and Transfer Railway Company, which is a belt line railway company connecting with all of the railroads running into Superior, and by said terminal company the cars of grain were delivered to other mills and elevators, or possibly to some extent for further shipment by rail eastward.

Substantially all the grain coming to Superior is produced in States other than Wisconsin, and its mill product is shipped to States east of Wisconsin, although a considerable amount of flour is marketed in Wisconsin by the mills. After the passage of chapter 19, 1905, objection was made to the inspection of the grain in Superior by agents of the Minnesota warehouse commission, and the mill and elevator owners and members of the Duluth Board of Trade, cooperating with the railroads, procured the stopping of the Great Northern cars at points on its line in Minnesota called Sandstone and Cass Lake, and the inspection which formerly was made at Superior took place at these points. After such inspection the transit was continued until the cars were stopped in the Great Northern yards as already stated. The Northern Pacific cars containing grain were stopped in Duluth and the inspection there made under the supervision of the Minnesota Commission.

It is charged in the answer that after the passage of chapter 19 complainant conspired and combined with the owners, managers, and operators of the other elevators in Superior, and of the mills, and the Board of Trade of Duluth and members thereof, not to buy or sell or manufacture any grain under the inspection, grading, or weighing of the Superior warehouse commission created by chapter 19, but to buy and sell all grain under Minnesota inspection and subject to weights to be made by designated agents of the Duluth Board of Trade. To this end the Duluth Board of Trade, in the summer of 1905, promulgated rules forbidding any of its members, under penalty of expulsion, from buying, selling, or handling any grain under Wisconsin inspection or weighing, from belonging to any other board of trade or like organization located within 100 miles of Duluth, and from maintaining or becoming interested directly or indirectly in any office or place of business outside of Duluth for the dealing in grain, and from becoming a stockholder in a corporation or member of a firm dealing in any grain dealt in or quoted upon the Duluth Board of Trade at any point within 100 miles of Duluth; and further requiring all persons applying for membership to the Duluth board to sign an application containing an agreement that the applicant would resign his membership in said board within five days if at any time he should violate such rules, and further requiring the applicant to use his influence toward the protection and upbuilding of the business of said board and its members in every way to the limit of his power and the best of his ability.

It is further alleged in the answer that the Duluth Board of Trade, for the purpose of restraining trade and commerce among the several States, endeavored and attempted to monopolize and control the market of grain by arbitrarily fixing a limit upon the price which should be offered or bid upon the board, and has prohibited and prevented its members from bidding on, offering to buy, or buying any grain at a higher price than so fixed, or buying or selling grain at any other place than upon the board within 100 miles of Duluth. The result of this action on the part of the board of trade and the mill owners has been to compel those persons formerly buying and selling grain in Superior to become members of the Duluth Board of Trade and to buy and sell all grain upon its floor.

The testimony shows that the railroads hauling grain have acquiesced in the action of the Duluth board and the mill and elevator owners, and thus the market for grain in Superior has been destroyed and forced into the Board of Trade of Duluth and Minneapolis, and that the Great Northern has stopped its trains at Sandstone and Cass Lake for the purpose of Minnesota inspection accordingly.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Secretary is through with that portion, there is another portion marked on page 7.

The Secretary read as follows:

Chapter 19, laws of 1905, creates a corporation known as the Superior Grain and Warehouse Commission, and provides for the regulation of public warehouses. Its chief purpose is to create a system of Wisconsin inspection and fully enforce the same through strict penal provisions, and incidentally prevent the sale of grain by the fraudulent Minnesota system. This purpose is sought to be accomplished, first, by carefully drawn provisions governing the inspection and weighing of grain milled, bought, or sold in Superior, or stored or shipped from Superior elevators or warehouses; second, by exhaustive and thorough regulation of the grain-warehouse business in Superior, and, third, by provisions making the sale, purchase, or delivery of grain under the Minnesota inspection system difficult, if not impossible. The intent of the law seems to be to destroy the Minnesota system, because it is fraudulent, and to substitute therefor the Wisconsin system.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that Judge Sanborn everywhere refers to the system as being fraudulent, in his opinion. I will ask the Secretary to read again from pages 13 and 14.

The Secretary read as follows:

Under these precedents it seems clear that the Wisconsin legislature might lawfully prevent fraudulent changes of grades, arbitrary or fraudulent "dockage" practiced by warehousemen, and shipping out at a higher grade than that on which the grain was taken in. Such regulations would be in aid and furtherance of commerce, by protecting the rights of both buyer and seller. Thus many objections to the Minnesota system, and frauds practiced under it, might be cured. Such regulations, although indirectly affecting interstate commerce, would be wholly local in their character and would undoubtedly be sustained. Such regulations might even include inspection and weighing, for the purpose of detecting and punishing fraud, preventing changes of grades, fraudulent "dockage," storage and resale on the weights found before such dockage occurred, etc. All this would be local regulation to protect the public from fraud and imposition and as such would not be unlawful regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. Again, on page 15.

The Secretary read as follows:

However justified or necessary these emphatic provisions may have seemed to the Wisconsin legislature, in order to destroy what appears from the evidence to be a fraudulent system, upheld by the combination of great interests, including buyer, seller, warehouseman, and carrier, they undoubtedly not only operate as a serious obstruction to commerce, as now carried on, under what should be one uniform system, but there is also disclosed a commercial conflict of considerable proportions between two States. Wisconsin is attempting to build up her trade at the expense of Minnesota, and the people most interested have taken and are now employing radical, if not unlawful, measures to thwart this attempt and keep this commerce in its accustomed channels. With the view of preventing fraud and protecting the public, the Wisconsin legislature has enacted that all sales of this large product shall be made only in Superior, and delivery, storage, and resale only under her inspection laws.

* * * * * * *

It is also clear to me that so important a matter as fixing the grades by which grain in interstate transportation can be sold, and without which it can not be sold on any large scale, admits of one uniform system or plan of regulation, and only one, and therefore falls within the exclusive power of Congress. Certainly it can not readily be bought and sold according to two systems of inspection. It can not be bought by one and sold by another. Conflicting State systems would only obstruct. (State Freight Tax, 15 Wall., 243; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S., 280; Henderson v. Mayor, 92 U. S., 273.) Like the regulation of tolls on an interstate bridge, the fixing of a standard of sale for grain moving in interstate commerce admits of only one uniform system. (Covington Bridge v. Kentucky, 154 U. S., 204.)

Because, also, the control of this great grain trade has become a matter of rivalry and commercial conflict between two States and agencies acting under their respective laws leads me to think that the subject is one of national and not State regulation.

* * * * * * *

How is it possible to market or sell grain under more than one standard or system of grading? It would seem to be most inconvenient, if not almost impossible, to make use of more than one standard, not only for sale, but storage and the convenient transfer of warehouse receipts. One system being thus required, sales in interstate commerce can only be regulated by Congress, except by mutual acquiescence of those taking part in the transactions. (State Freight Tax, 15 Wall., 232.)

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think that is all I care to have read at this time. I will, however, ask that the opinion be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONG in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the closing which has been read, Judge Sanborn indicated the only proper remedy to cure these defects, and that is by a national law, a national standard, something that would be uniform and could be adopted by all the States and could be the basis of sales in any State and in any city of the United States.

Mr. President, I think that that is the only remedy. I had this read so as to justify my assertion that I had other than my own opinion, other than the reports of the State grain and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota to justify the fact that the system worked a great fraud and a great hardship. On that proposition, I think we have the concurrence of Judge Sanborn, who heard the evidence and tried this case.

The amendment which I have offered here is simply, as I stated before, to make effective the amendment already adopted by the committee. The amendment which the Senate has inserted simply authorizes or directs the Secretary of Agriculture to take samples and to analyze them. The purpose of that analysis must necessarily be to insure information to the purchaser or to the shipper. If it is to be hidden away by the Agricultural Department, no great benefit can be derived. I can see no objection, inasmuch as you are required to take the sample, inasmuch as you are required to analyze it, to make a certificate stating what that analysis is and what the grade is and sending that certificate to the foreign purchaser or consignee, that it may guide him in his purchase, and also mailing it to the consignor or shipper for his guidance.

What injury is to follow from the present system? What is the trouble? The first is this: We are sending out continually to foreign countries shiploads of grain bearing a certificate that is a fraud, because the certificate places the grain at a higher grade than it really is entitled to. In most cases it is due to the mixing of a lower grade with a higher grade. In many instances my belief is it is an unjust and unwarranted grading, higher than the particular article is entitled to. The result of that is, as I stated before, that our grain is becoming discredited in every foreign market.

I wish to have read short extracts from a letter from our consul-general at Marseille, Mr. Robert P. Skinner, and also two letters from wholesalers or dealers in grain at Marseille. I simply ask that that portion be read which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is of the highest importance that our relations with our French wheat customers be based upon mutual confidence. * * *

Three protests have been formally lodged with me in regard to the condition of a cargo of wheat arriving from New Orleans; a like complaint has been made against wheat from Galveston, and an English trade paper, noting a communication from its Marseille correspondent, says: "We may add that London importers have been making similar complaints." These facts suggest that whatever accuracy the criticisms may possess, they are not confined to an isolated case or to a single city.

As my correspondents explain, wheat from New Orleans is purchased in Marseille on the faith of the certificates of inspection issued by the board of trade of that city. The exporter appears to have no responsibility for quality of the grain beyond the production of an "official" certificate of inspection, which being in proper form binds the buyer to accept the consignment. It necessarily follows that unless the trade organizations issuing certificates exercise proper care in making the statements conform to the facts they must lose credit and drive business into other channels. These certificates have been accepted the more willingly in certain quarters because of the impression that an "official" certificate was a document issued by the United States Government. In France boards of trade and chambers of commerce derive their authority from the Government itself, and the belief that similar conditions prevailed in the United States was natural and no doubt led in the first place to the lodging of complaints at this consulate.

My own interest in the subject arises from no wish to prejudge the question of fact in the cases actually presented, but from a desire to show the imperative necessity of preventing all cause for criticism of our export trade.

* * * * * * *

MARSEILLE, December 8, 1889.

Hon. ROBERT P. SKINNER,
United States Consul.

DEAR SIR: We beg to inform you of the complaints which have been made here recently against the careless manner in which certain Galveston and New Orleans grain inspectors execute the duties intrusted to them. The confidence placed in them has been betrayed, and, while we ourselves do not believe that there is anything but carelessness at the bottom of the recent occurrences, we have repeatedly been obliged to listen to accusations of fraud against these inspectors by local millers and dealers, who believe that they have been prevailed upon to issue false certificates. We are doing our best to dissipate this feeling, but the fact remains that confidence can no longer be placed in the certificates of inspection issued in the above-mentioned ports.

* * * * * * *

In the interest of American commerce, we venture to suggest that your observations on this subject directed to the proper authorities in the United States will not be amiss.

Yours, very truly, BENDIT LIMBURGER & CO.

MARSEILLE, December 9, 1889.

The CONSUL OF THE UNITED STATES.
Marseille.

SIR: I send you a sample [a] from a consignment of hard winter wheat, No. 2 Kansas, discharged from the steamship Olbia, with a certificate of inspection from the inspector at New Orleans.

I call your attention particularly to the fact that for a long time the wheat as delivered has not at all corresponded with the guaranty of the certificates. The grain which I have just received leaves a great deal to be desired. It contains a large proportion of foreign matter, and the number of small kernels is much too large. Finally, and most grave, this wheat is not perfectly sound. It has suffered before shipment, as proved by the "burned" grains found in large quantities. Should I be called upon to classify this wheat, I would not hesitate to say that it is inferior by from 10 to 15 per cent as compared with standard hard winter No. 2 Kansas, such as should be delivered after examination by an official inspector.

You can understand how my trade interests must suffer from such a delivery, and future relations will be exceedingly difficult if a change for the better is not made in the existing system of verification at the port of shipment. For my own part, I prefer to renounce further operations until a new order of things is established, since to do otherwise is to submit to heavy loss.

GUILLAUME ARTAUD.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senate can see from that letter what is almost universal in every one of the foreign markets for our grain. The complaint comes from everywhere that the shipments do not measure up to the standards of the grades under the laws of the States in which they are made.

Great injury follows from this. I know in a letter from the Board of Trade of Wisconsin, I think it was last year, they quoted prices of American North Dakota No. 1 northern wheat and Canadian No. 1 northern, which had even been frosted. The latter was lately sold in foreign markets at 5 cents a bushel more than ours simply because the purchasers had confidence in its grading and had no confidence in our grades. As everyone knows, when the grain goes to a foreign country the millers who are buying it naturally inspect it.

Now, some one gets the benefit of this. The party who gets the benefit is always the middleman, as is shown by the opinion, a portion of which I have just had read.

While I am on this subject I wish to read a portion of a letter that directly affects my own State. We are commencing now to raise a great amount of macaroni wheat in that State, and it is to the credit of the Secretary of Agriculture that we have secured a species of grain which brings a good price, and which is one of the best kinds of macaroni grain that is raised anywhere in the country. It is grain that will stand more of moist weather and is less liable to be injured even by a dry spell than our other wheat. It is going to become an important wheat in our country. A single shipment of that wheat to a Mediterranean port, where the macaroni is used so extensively, would destroy for many years the reputation of that grain.

Here is a letter that was written last November. It is from Mr. H. T. Fowler, of the "Alger-Fowler Company, shippers and exporters, grain and grain products, Board of Trade, Superior, Wis." I will read only a portion of it. In this letter he says:

The largest cargo of wheat ever loaded was put on the steamer Wolvin a day or two ago. Its cargo goes to Mediterranean points. It is all durum wheat and the Minnesota officials graded it No. 2 durum. Our inspectors inspected it as No. 3 with a dockage, and say it was a very poor No. 3.

It is undoubtedly true that that wheat was taken in in Minnesota as No. 3, but when it was shipped out and put on board of the ship it went out as No. 2.

Our inspectors inspected it No. 3 with a dockage and say it was a very poor No. 3. This is of more importance to you than would appear at first as your State raised fifteen millions of this variety and next year they may raise fifty millions.

I will mail you a portion of the official sample and you can readily see that it is smutty and was undoubtedly bought of the producer as rejected and at 10 per cent discount.

Next year Mediterranean ports will buy this wheat on the basis of the quality of these poor dishonest cargoes, and it will cost the great State of North Dakota, say, $5,000,000, and as we have just begun exporting this wheat the mention of American macaroni wheat will make foreigners mad—and justly. It would be a good thing for your State if the foreigners were advised of the character of this wheat through the Bureau of Commerce. You can see where this crooked inspection lands the agricultural interests of your State. When you get a law passed the elevator ring will try to have their men appointed.

Now, I ask the Senator from Vermont—he need not answer it now, but in his own good time—what objection there can be to extending the amendment, which he has already adopted, so that the person making this inspection which he provides for can make a certificate which will guide the purchaser and will have the stamp of verity on it upon which any purchaser in any foreign country can rely? I can see no possible harm that can follow. I can see that it will to a great extent remedy the wrongs that are being committed, such as are indicated in the letter which I have just read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If my colleague will allow me, I will state that I have examined the amendment he proposes to the committee amendment. I wish to say for the information of the chairman of the committee, who has not perhaps paid as much attention to this subject as my colleague and myself, that the amendment proposed by my colleague is entirely acceptable to me, and I think it ought to be adopted in conjunction with the committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, I will close my remarks after having one other letter from our consul-general at Marseille read. It appears in the statement made before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. My object in having it read is to show the lack of uniformity in the grading of our export wheat. What we call a certain grade of durum wheat in Minnesota and in North Dakota is called macaroni of a different grade when it reaches New York. And if it goes directly from Duluth it goes to a foreign port as one kind of grain. If it goes from the port of New York it goes to the same location, say Liverpool, under a different grade and a different name, and as has been very succinctly stated in the opinion of Judge Sanborn, that very matter of different kinds of grades and standards of the same grade is a great hindrance in interstate or foreign commerce.

I will ask that the letter on pages 13 and 14 and a part of 15 be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AMERICAN CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Marseille, December 7, 1905.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a dispatch from the honorable the Secretary of Agriculture, dated November 16, in regard to macaroni wheat and certificates of inspection issued thereon. The very valuable information on this subject has been communicated to the chamber of commerce and to the interested importers, and being in the form of an authentic statement, has cleared up some doubts which have constituted an annoying interference with the development of the American wheat trade in this port.

I regret to state that the same difficulties in varying forms will be likely to come up from time to time so long as the issue of grain-inspection certificates is subject to no central control, vested either in some appropriate department of the Government or in some responsible voluntary association of the various commercial bodies now controlling not only our commerce in wheat, but many similar commodities, the aggregate exports of which reach many millions of dollars.

There is no substantial difference between the guaranties, or rather the absence of guaranties, on the face of grain certificates issued at Duluth and New York, although wheat exported from New York reaches the port of delivery in the hold of the steamer into which it was loaded, while wheat exported from Duluth is necessarily transshipped a number of times before reaching the foreign consumer. In the case of interior shipments the foreign buyer has no means of absolutely knowing that the grain described in his certificate is the same grain actually delivered to him in Marseille. The logical result of this condition is that the certificates issued at interior ports are accepted with hesitation, and that in many cases the buyer stipulates that he shall have a New York certificate, with the consequent effect that interior exporters are at a disadvantage, and a tendency to concentrate export business at New York or other final ports of departure is unwittingly encouraged and sustained.

In the information supplied by the Secretary of Agriculture it is stated that "the New York macaroni wheats are supposed to conform with the Duluth grades of durum." The buyer residing 5,000 miles from the port of shipment, who secures no commercial guaranty, and merely an assurance conveyed upon a scrap of paper, is dissatisfied with grain standards which are merely "supposed" to conform with each other. The Minnesota board of grain appeals, organized under State law, has thus established certain grades of grain, to which the certificates issued at Duluth and St. Paul are supposed to conform:

"No. 1 durum: Shall be bright, sound, and well cleaned, and be composed of durum, commonly known as 'macaroni wheat.'

"No. 2 durum: Shall include wheat that is bleached and shrunken.

"No. 3 durum: Shall include all wheat that is badly bleached, smutty, or for any other cause unfit for No. 2."

The New York Produce Exchange, in accordance with the grain rules, thus describes its standards:

"No. 1 macaroni wheat: Shall be bright, sound, well cleaned, and be composed of what is known as 'rice' and (or) 'goose wheat.'

"No. 2 macaroni wheat: Shall be inferior to No. 1, but sound, and be composed of what is known as 'rice' and (or) 'goose wheat,' and may include wheat that is bleached and shrunken.

"No. 3 macaroni wheat: Shall include all wheat badly bleached or smutty, or for any other cause unfit for No. 2."

In the foregoing typical instances we find not only a confusing difference in the name of the wheat described, but differences of language much more perplexing. The Minnesota standard describes durum, commonly known as "macaroni wheats," which we all know to be product of certain imported Russian and Algerian seed. The New York descriptions of what is presumably the same grain speak of what is known as "rice or goose wheat," which are wheats known commercially in the United States for years before macaroni wheats were ever seriously considered. At New York there are three grades of these hard wheats, and in Minnesota there are four.

Similar differences can be discovered throughout the long list of American cereals. Minnesota No. 1 white winter wheat is described by the Minnesota board as "sound, well cleaned, reasonably plump, and composed of the white varieties." According to the New York Produce Exchange, No. 1 white winter wheat "shall be sound, plump, dry, well cleaned, and weigh not less than 60 pounds, Winchester standard."

In the United States, where buyers are familiar with every phase of the wheat question, these variations may seem to be comparatively unimportant, but in France when one board says that wheat shall be dry and another omits this word altogether, when one board speaks of Winchester standard and another board omits this requirement, when one board speaks of plump wheat and another says that the same wheat need be only reasonably plump, the first effect of an unsatisfactory delivery is the refusal of the miller to take the grain, followed by the appointment of experts and all the other complications incident to reasonable doubt and distrust.

It is asserted, in addition to the foregoing, that the actual deliveries of macaroni wheat in Marseille of the same nominal grade have varied to a very substantial degree, and while a rise in the market and serious local need have prevented any unpleasant litigation up to this time, it is quite conceivable that if the buyers had faced different market conditions the situation might not have been the same.

The Secretary of Agriculture has been so successful in securing the cultivation of hard wheats suitable for the European markets that I trust he will now be equally solicitous in regard to the correction of the evils which I have described in some detail. I am personally convinced, and have so reported on several different occasions, that grain and other standards should be fixed for the whole country by the National Government, and that deliveries based upon certificates should conform to standard samples, which might properly be deposited in the important commercial consulates of the world, but whether the result be reached in this way or by voluntary organization, something should be done to improve the situation as it stands to-day.

I have to thank the Secretary of Agriculture for his appreciated observations personal to myself.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT P. SKINNER,
Consul-General.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that letter needs no comment; it explains itself. It must be apparent to anyone who has the slightest knowledge about our export trade in grain that it is absolutely necessary that we have uniformity of standards and that those standards be just. We already have a stamp upon every ham that goes into our export trade. It carries with it confidence, because it is the stamp of the Government. I am certain that in the export of wheat, that portion, at least, which is examined under this bill, it will be of great benefit to our wheat trade if it goes into the foreign market accompanied by some certificate showing its proper grade.

I wish to say, in closing, that I hope some time in the future—and in the near future, considering the exigency of this matter—that I may be able to have the attention of the entire Senate directed toward these conditions, which appeal to me for some character of remedy. I wish to reiterate what I have stated before to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], that I do not charge any one individual with any particular offense. I simply know that there is a wrong somewhere. It is pointed out, it is shown in the reports, and the result is very injurious to the people of my State, and I hope that we will be able to remedy it. We want honest and fair grades; we want honest weights and measures; we want honest dockage. No company or corporation should object to that or should object to a proper system to secure that result.

PANAMA CANAL.

During the delivery of Mr. MCCUMBER's speech, at 2 o'clock p. m.,

Mr. KITTREDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction. My object is to have the bill made the unfinished business, with the understanding, of course, that it will not interfere with the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, I understand, wishes to have the bill taken up now, and then passed over.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I will then have it laid aside.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right; I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consent is granted, without objection.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I thank the Senator from North Dakota very much.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18537) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not feel at this time equipped with facts and data sufficient to analyze the charge made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I understood him to charge that the commission men were appointed by and dominated by the elevator companies of the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me correct the Senator right now upon that point, if he will allow me.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not the case. I stated that in my opinion—and that opinion is supported by the opinion of those in whom I have entire confidence, and is generally accepted to be the case—the chief inspector is appointed through the influence of the great terminal elevators and the purchasers of our wheat, and that the chief inspector appoints his deputies, who are, of course, responsible to him. That has nothing to do with the State commission. The commission makes fair and honest reports, I think.

Mr. CLAPP. In answer to that, I can only say that there are two political parties in the State of Minnesota, and I hardly think that the control of the chief inspector by the elevators of that State would long pass unchallenged by the political party not in sympathy with the appointment.

As I stated before, it has been some years since I was familiar with these matters from a personal standpoint. At that time it was an established fact that the Minnesota standard was recognized in Liverpool, unquestioned and unchallenged.

Now, we all want the same thing. We want a proper system, a just system, and a system fair to all. Our State is a great agricultural State, and it would be anything but wise, proper, or patriotic to stand for legislation that was not in harmony with their interests.

But I want to call the Senator's attention to this fact. Perhaps I am unusually warm in the advocacy of it. A large portion of our State for years has been and is to-day dominated by the Federal Government. I think our people are gradually getting tired of that. I think our people prefer self-government. It may be, sir, that in the process of time we will have to take the map of the United States and wipe out the State lines. It may be, in the process of time, that every function of the State will have to be abdicated and surrendered to the General Government, and I sometimes think that, in a measure, inevitable; but before we do that, I think we ought to proceed with an investigation beyond the scope of a mere ex parte statement made here in the Senate, however much credit and credence we should be disposed to give to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

If a commission is to inspect grain, and if improper influences are brought to bear upon that commission, I submit that it is far easier for the farmer to control that commission when the commission and the inspector are only one remove from the farmer's vote than when they are several removes under the Federal Government. If it is true that these great interests can influence this inspection as it is now administered, I for one fail to see where the farmer's remedy would be when that appointment was removed to the Federal authority instead of being under the State authority.

The people of Minnesota have it in their power to-day, if any such abuses exist as it is charged exist, to make a change in the personnel of that commission; but if these influences now pervade administrative quarters, they would be far more powerless if the appointment came at the hands of the Federal Government. It may be that the people out there are ready to surrender and to abdicate their control of this matter, but for one I do not propose to stand here and favor that until I know the people of my State desire it.

It is very strange indeed, if all these things exist, that we have not heard of them. In our legislature both parties are represented, and this system could have been attacked. Some years ago there was an investigation, but of late years I have not heard of any serious complaint of this system. If it is true that there is complaint, if it is true that it may be necessary at some time to remove this inspection and turn it over into the hands of the Federal Government, I submit to the Senate it ought not to be done until a thorough investigation on this subject has been made—something more than this mere ex parte statement to which we have listened this morning and the letters which have been read to go into the RECORD upon this subject.

I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that it may be necessary, perhaps, at some time to carefully draft a law, if we can do so within constitutional limitations, to regulate this subject where it comes in conflict between two States. I am not certain but that may have to be done; perhaps it would be wise to do it; but it should be done with a great deal of care and caution and after full inquiry as to the scope of our authority to do it.

But I do submit again, Mr. President, that for the present, upon this hearing, it is hardly the wise thing to take this inspection from the State and turn it over to the Federal Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota has certainly not listened to my entire argument, if he is supposing that I am asking that the bill which I introduced for general national inspection be incorporated into the pending measure.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, after the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] had asked him a question, I asked the Senator from North Dakota a question purposely to ascertain whether it was at this time understood that that was what the Senator from North Dakota desired to do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have had my amendment printed. It only affects the matter of making a certificate where an inspection is already provided for on export. It goes a little way in the right direction.

I want to correct the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], if he thinks the people of his State have never had this matter under investigation before and that they have never said anything about it. I do not know what influences may govern the press of the great cities of Minnesota; I do not know what their sentiments may be; I do not know to what extent they have considered this matter; but I know that they have considered it to some extent. All the great newspapers of the Senator's own State have considered it, and many of the smaller ones, as I know, for I live on the border line of the State of Minnesota.

There was a committee appointed by the legislature of the State of Minnesota to investigate this same matter about seven or eight years ago—in 1899. Now, here is a little information from that report. The report of this committee concludes its review of the testimony taken with the following charge——

Mr. CLAPP. I stated that this matter had been taken up some time ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand; but I want the Senator from Minnesota to understand what the charge is. They say:

> From this it appears that nearly one-third of the crop has been marketed each year before the farmer is enabled to get the grade that his crop merits.

Somebody does wrong if that is true, and I have not heard that this system has been changed. I do not think the farmer should be robbed of one-third of his crop before he gets a just grade. I am assuming that that investigation was fairly and properly made; and, as I have said, it was made in the Senator's own State. Again this committee say:

> That early in the season the inspection made by your inspectors was very severe against the producer, and that subsequently—later in the season, somewhere about the middle of October, and from that on—much more liberal grades were given.

I think before the middle of October practically four-fifths of our grain goes into the market, though I may be in error about that. The committee also state in this same report that:

> The defense made by the chief inspector when called to the witness stand was, in his words: "We take the benefit of the doubt until we get started, because we do not know what we are getting into." Another of his reasons was: "In order to have a little margin, one which we can carry our crop through on without exercising apprehension on the part of eastern buyers."

They are not as careful about the apprehension on the part of the producer and the seller of this grain.

May I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota right here, to show that the abuse still exists, to a table taken from the report of the State inspector of Minnesota for 1904, showing that there were of No. 1 northern, received by the elevators during that year 12,401,897 bushels of wheat, and there were shipped out of the same elevators 18,217,789 bushels, or an excess of shipments of that grade of grain over receipts of 5,815,892 bushels.

I call attention to the fact that there were 10,295,172 bushels of No. 2 northern received, and only 6,723,732 bushels were shipped out. Worse than that, there were of No. 3 northern 2,616,065 bushels taken into the elevators and only 283,299 bushels shipped out. That grain went through a physical metamorphosis and was immediately changed by a certificate from No. 3 rejected and No. 2 northern to the higher grade No. 1 northern, which is the highest grade of northern grain. That is from the 1904 report.

Here is the report of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission for the crop year ending August 31, 1902, for Duluth. The Duluth elevators took in 15,187,012 bushels of No. 1 northern and they shipped out 19,886,137 bushels, or an excess of 4,699,125 bushels; and in the same time they took in of No. 2 northern 19,693,454 bushels and only shipped out 15,178,999 bushels. They took in of No. 3 northern 7,035,133 bushels and only shipped out 1,971,355 bushels. In other words, six-sevenths of that No. 3 northern was converted into and became No. 2, or a higher grade, when it was shipped out, much of it going into No. 2 and some of it into No. 1.

This is not due to dirt or foul stuff that is in the grain, because that is taken out in the dockage. The small undeveloped kernels and all the foul stuff is already taken out and allowed for. The Senator can see that there must necessarily be an injustice to the producer of that grain. I believe the Senator from Minnesota would like to see that corrected, not only for the great number of farmers in the State of Minnesota, if it be true—and I have read from the record of the warehouse commission of that State—I believe he wants that corrected if it is a wrong to the people of his State, and I want it corrected, because I know it is a wrong to the people of my State.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, just a few words in reference to the pending amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry contained in the bill now before the Senate. My colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] has very accurately described the conditions which prevail in the wheat-growing States of the Northwest and the conditions under which the products of the farms of that section are sold to the consumer. Those conditions are almost intolerable. The greatest injustice has been visited upon the grain growers of the Northwestern States for years and years. Not only that, Mr. President, but there has been a great injustice visited upon the foreign buyers of our grain, as I shall show a little later on from letters which I have here. I think I will introduce those letters now so that I shall not have to go back to that point later.

I have here, furnished to me by the Department of Agriculture, a letter signed by John Martin, secretary of the Glasgow Corn Trade Association, dated January 12, 1906, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

I will also ask the Secretary to read, in that connection, a letter addressed to our Secretary of Agriculture, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

GLASGOW CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION,
BALTIC CHAMBER, 50 WELLINGTON STREET,
Glasgow, January 12, 1906.

THE SECRETARY NORFOLK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Norfolk, Va.

DEAR SIR: My committee had under consideration letters from Messrs. McKinnon & McDonald and Mr. William Maclay, members of this association, with reference to an arrival of No. 2 mixed corn per steamship Kastalia, carrying Norfolk Chamber of Commerce grain-inspection certificates. Messrs. McKinnon & McDonald say "this corn has arrived soft, dirty, and heated, busheling 52 to 53 pounds, whereas corn by the same vessel, loaded at the same time and certificated at Newport News, discharged in good condition and busheled 56 pounds. Fifty-six pounds is also the mean weight of any shipments of new corn which have arrived here this season from other ports." A member of my committee had Indian corn, ex steamship Kastalia, analyzed, with the following result:

	Per cent.
Prime corn, moisture:
In sample, as received before grinding	16.16
In sample, as received after grinding	16.16
Soft corn, moisture:
In sample, as received before grinding	19.65
In sample, as received after grinding	19.50

My committee instructs me to point how destructive of all respect and consideration for your certificates a shipment of this sort is, and is of opinion that cases such as this call for most thorough inquiry on your part.

Yours, truly, JOHN MARTIN, Secretary.

P. S.—As this is urgent, I respectfully ask for a reply by return.

GLASGOW CORN TRADE ASSOCIATION,
BALTIC CHAMBER, 50 WELLINGTON STREET,
Glasgow, January 13, 1906.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I inclose copy of letter sent to Norfolk Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the quality of certain parcels of Indian corn arrived per steamship Kastalia, carrying Norfolk Chamber of Commerce grain-inspection certificates.

My committee will be glad if you can see your way to take up this matter, as they feel it to be of the very utmost importance in the interest of the trade generally.

Yours, truly, JOHN MARTIN, Secretary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, here is a direct plea from the foreign buyer of American grain to our Secretary of Agriculture for protection against the character of inspection which has been so thoroughly described here this morning.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. LATIMER. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Does he think it is the duty of the Government of the United States to enter into all the business transactions of a private citizen, and, through an inspection, to prevent fraud in the selling of apples, in the selling of wheat, and of every other article that is put on the market by the private citizen? As I understand, the wheat growers put their wheat on the market. It is claimed they have been defrauded by somebody, and therefore it is the duty of the Government of the United States to send an agent out after that wheat, follow it to the person to whom it has been sold, and notify that person that the wheat is not exactly up to the standard, and thus interfere with private business and interfere with the business interests of the country.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, that question has been asked a great many times in this body since I have been a member of it. It has been answered but in one way, and that is, when the emergency arises, the work should be done by the steady hand of the Federal Government. I ask the Senator if we have not done that with respect to American meats, and if the system is not working as we desire it should work, with great benefit to the producers of this country?

The average exports of the principal cereals of the United States for the five years ending June 30, 1904, were as follows—and these figures are significant:

	Bushels.
Barley	11,500,000
Buckwheat	200,000
Corn	107,000,000
Oats	18,800,000
Rye	2,600,000
Wheat	109,400,000
Flax	2,800,000

I do not doubt that every bushel of this American-produced grain was discredited through the system of inspection prevailing in this country.

Mr. President, in regard to this amendment, I want to say that my colleague, at the last session of Congress, introduced a bill covering the question of grain inspection. It was, of course, an entirely new subject. My colleague discussed the question here very intelligently and very thoroughly. At the time the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, it went, as is the custom of that committee, to the Secretary of Agriculture for a report, not that we desired to ascertain whether the Secretary agreed that the bill was proper or not, but we desired to find out whether he could administer such a bill in case it became a law. It is unnecessary here to make reference to the report of the Secretary with regard to the bill, but this is what happened. The introduction of that bill and the speech made by my colleague aroused criticism and investigation, resulting not only in the Department of Agriculture here, but all chambers of commerce all over the country taking notice of this very important question. The result was that when this session of Congress convened we were ready to take up the question and to give it consideration. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, it seemed to me that we could insert in this bill a provision under which at least a part of the work desired to be accomplished by my colleague, and covered in the bill which he introduced, could be done. After conference with various officers of the Agricultural Department, Senators, and others, I introduced an amendment which will be found in the bill now being considered. That amendment is as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points of export as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as the evidence at hand may warrant.

Let us see what would happen if that became a law—and I think it ought to become a law. The result would be that the Secretary of Agriculture would probably establish a laboratory at each of the three principal export points of the United States—New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans—and after investigation made of the grain proposed to be exported from those points, the Secretary would issue a certificate as to the grade of such grain. I venture to say, Mr. President, that so soon as we enter upon this business no foreign buyer of grain will consent to accept a cargo of grain shipped from this country unless it is accompanied by a Government certificate. I venture the further suggestion that, under the provisions of this amendment, no shipper of grain in this country will think of sending a cargo of grain abroad unless it is accompanied by the Government certificate, because his own certificate and his own inspection already stand condemned before the country and before the world.

I want to have read at the desk what has been said with respect to this amendment by Doctor Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Agricultural Department. I will say that Doctor Galloway is well known to most Senators, indeed, to all Senators. He is one of the ablest men in that Department, a man thoroughly devoted to and thoroughly conversant with his duties. At my suggestion, the Doctor dictated a statement with respect to this amendment and what its operation would be if enacted into law. I ask that his satement may be read.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LATIMER. As I understand him, the Senator has reference to the amendment adopted in the committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. LATIMER. Well, there is no objection to that, so far as I know.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. The two Senators from North Dakota have disclosed a condition in three States—North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin—that is startling, and should startle both the country and the Senate. In ten years the farmers of those States have been swindled out of 27,000,000 bushels of wheat. They have not only been swindled out of that much wheat, but they have been swindled in the grade of their wheat by being paid for their wheat as of an inferior quality, when they should have been paid the rating and the pay that goes to a higher quality. This stupendous system of fraud is carried on through the agency of State officials; at least, it must be with their connivance and knowledge.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And handling an article of interstate commerce passing from one State to another.

Mr. PATTERSON. And so incurable and so deep rooted is this fraudulent system of which the farmers of those three States were the victims that the Senators feel compelled to apply to the Federal Government for protection, apparently being unable to secure the necessary protection from the officials or the people of their own States. Really, what I wanted to ask the Senator about is this: The grain that goes into these elevators is intended—or perhaps I had better ask the question, Is it or is it not wheat that is intended for foreign shipment, or are these frauds practiced not only upon wheat for export, but also upon wheat raised by the farmers of those States which is subsequently used for domestic purposes?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The wheat that goes into the large terminal elevators referred to by my colleague is both for export and domestic consumption, but largely for export.

This amendment deals with export grain alone. I have no doubt, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, that just so soon as this new process of inspection is put into operation it will be extended, by the demands of the boards of trade and commercial bodies themselves, because as soon as you place a Government certificate on a cargo of wheat or a consignment of wheat that alone gives to that cargo or that consignment standing in the business world, and the commercial bodies themselves will ask in a very short time, I believe, that all wheat shall be inspected and graded by the Federal Government.

Mr. PATTERSON. I doubt if any of the revelations of official fraud and graft that the last year has produced could be considered as startling, almost as horrifying, as have been the revelations made by the two Senators from North Dakota.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think the Senator overdraws the picture.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Were not these same figures practically given by the Senator from North Dakota a year ago?

Mr. McCUMBER. They were given by myself two years ago, and I am surprised that they did not equally startle the Senator at that time.

Mr. CLAPP. A few days later, let me tell the Senator from Colorado, the figures were filed here by the railroad and warehouse commission, if I remember correctly. The matter was exploited in the Senate two years ago. The junior Senator from North Dakota states that the boards of trade took it up, and yet with these revelations there has been little or nothing heard of this matter from the day that the Senator from North Dakota made the statement two years ago, or a year ago, whichever it was, until now.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The trouble about that is this: The Senator from Minnesota, who is one of the most industrious members of this body, has since that time almost continuously been engaged in regulating railroad and Indian affairs, and I fear that he has not given to this great subject the attention to which it is entitled, not because it is not his desire to do so, but simply because he has not had the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I suggest also that the Senator must have stopped reading the papers, because I have read a great many articles on it in different papers, and I have them now, and a good many from papers within his own State.

Mr. CLAPP. I confess to some surprise, after the statement made a year ago and the answer made by the commission, that there has been nothing, so far as I can recall now, to warrant me in a belief in the accuracy of the figures presented this morning by the Senator from North Dakota. I am as ready as he is, while I regret this constant turning over of things to the Federal Government, to put this thing in the hands of the Federal Government if I can believe that our people want it, if I can believe that they believe, waiving my own judgment, that it would be to their interest to do it. I do not want to be misunderstood on this question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask my colleague to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have kept in touch with the history of matters pertaining to this subject, and I think the Senator is in error in supposing that the commission has ever filed, and made a matter of record, any answer to the argument which I made at that time. I myself, receiving letters from some of the elevator companies, in which they gave their own figures in an attempt to refute a statement that was published in one or two of the Wisconsin papers, in justice to them, as they thought they ought to be heard, filed their reply and made it a part of the record. But there never has been any attempt on the part of anyone to answer the propositions which I then made and which are contained in the figures I have since read to the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the most startling thing about it is not the enormity of the frauds, nor the length of time their perpetration has been in existence. It is not the number of people who suffer from them, but the fact that being public property, being given to the public through the public press and from the halls of Congress, the people of the States submit to them. The wonder is that the administrations in those States, that stand by, with the power to remedy the evil under their control, have not been spewed out by the people and more honest men put in their places, men who would see that honest men filled the positions to protect the farming communities of those three States.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I make no——

Mr. PATTERSON. They are great agricultural States. The one great industry in those States is agriculture—farming. They have it in their power to remedy this evil, if they have not become so used to fraud and graft in every department of official and public life that they have come to the conclusion that to struggle against it is useless, and that there is nothing for the people to do but to bow down in submission to the yoke that those who perpetrate these frauds have placed upon their shoulders.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may interrupt the Senator from Colorado, if we have any remedy in our own State in the matter of the grading of our grain, which is done from five hundred to a thousand miles distant from where it is shipped, I should like to know what the remedy would be.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understood from the Senator from North Dakota that these outrages were traceable to officials of his own State——

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. To a commission——

Mr. McCUMBER. It is evident that the——

Mr. PATTERSON. Which has failed to perform its duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is evident that the Senator has not heard anything I have been talking about if he draws any such assumption.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does the Senator from North Dakota say that the swindling of his constituents to the extent of 27,000,000 bushels of wheat occurred on the seaboard? I refer to the 27,000,000 bushels of wheat that were taken out of the warehouses which never went in. According to his own statement it was perpetrated with the knowledge of the chief inspector, who was in the interest of these great warehouses and who necessarily occupied his position with the knowledge or connivance of other State officials. I am frank to say that if such is not the case I have listened to his long speech and very interesting and startling speech and failed to catch the import of it. Does the Senator from North Dakota now desire to shift the responsibility to officials who have no connection with his home government and who conduct the business of their office outside of his own State and at ports for exportation? If that is the case, then I am frank to say I have listened with very poor results to the startling statements, as I understood his statements to be.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask my colleague if he will allow me to answer the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like very much to complete my statement. Of course, under the circumstances, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assumed that the Senator from Colorado had a fair knowledge of the system by which our wheat is disposed of. We have no commission that passes on it at all before it is disposed of. We have no commission that passes on it at all, because it is all graded at the terminals, the great markets of the country. We have not a single one of those in our State. The price of the commodity is fixed by the grade, and the grade is made by inspectors and is fixed in the State of Minnesota by officers appointed by and through the laws of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then the charge is transferred——

Mr. McCUMBER. We have no control whatever over it.

Again, the Senator is in error in the quotation. The twenty-six or twenty-seven million bushels, I stated, and it is also stated in the opinion of Judge Sanborn as established by the testimony of a witness, represents the number of bushels shipped out of all those elevators in excess of what was shipped in, within a period of ten years.

Mr. PATTERSON. I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. A portion, of course, from my State, and a portion from the others.

Mr. PATTERSON. From the three States in question. Then I understand the Senator from North Dakota to transfer the responsibility for these enormous frauds from the officials of his own State to the officials of the State of Minnesota. There is where the swindling occurs. What has the Senator from Minnesota to say?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The question asked by the Senator from Colorado is likely to lead to lengthy debate, and I should like very much to finish what I have to say, as I know the Senator from Vermont is exceedingly anxious to proceed with the bill. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Minnesota, both of whom are very interesting debaters, that at some future time they can have this thing out between them, and I will be very glad to witness the bout at any time they may fix.

Mr. CLAPP. All I want——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. All I ask is that my silence shall not be construed as an admission. That is all.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask for the reading of the article compiled by Doctor Galloway, explaining the workings of the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The inspection of grain as it is now conducted in the United States is the cause of continual dissatisfaction both among dealers in this country and with purchasers abroad. The dissatisfaction among foreign purchasers has recently become so acute that our export trade is seriously threatened with extinction unless some means of remedying the conditions are soon put into effect.

American grain inspection at the present time is conducted in a great variety of ways and under at least three distinct classes of control. The oldest type is that by which a chamber of commerce or board of trade employs inspectors to examine carload lots of grain arriving at a market, and also those carloads being shipped. The second type is the one by which inspectors are employed by some branch of the State government. This is known as State inspection and is now in use in Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Minnesota, and Washington. The third and least common type is the one where inspectors are employed by common carriers or by private parties. In all these types of inspection the inspectors depend almost entirely upon a superficial examination of the grain. The grade rules under which they work are purposely indefinite in nature, being composed of such expressions as "reasonably dry," "reasonably clean," and "in good condition." Investigations conducted by the Department of Agriculture have shown that it is possible to grade grain accurately. This can be done with sufficient accuracy for all practical purposes by ordinary methods of laboratory analysis.

The amendment proposed by Senator HANSBROUGH would enable the Department to establish laboratories at three principal points of export and to place in each of these laboratories an officer who could examine consignments of grain and report upon the same. It is believed that these laboratory investigations at the ports would, in effect, cause the present inspection service to improve its methods and finally adopt the Government standards. Foreign purchasers would learn of the establishment of these Government laboratories, and in addition to requiring the regular inspection certificates might, and could, secure a certificate from the Government. The result would be the unification of grades and a system which would eventually remove many of the difficulties now encountered.

The conditions of our foreign trade certainly demand some improvement if the custom of selling grain on certificate is to be continued, and it is very desirable that it should continue because by its use grain can be handled much more rapidly and cheaply than can be done by the sample method of dealing—the only alternative unless commercial grades can be maintained and grain certificates recognized as having value.

It is estimated that to maintain these laboratories at three points—say Boston, New Orleans, and San Francisco—would require about $5,000 each. The officer in charge would have to be paid a salary of not less than $2,000. He would probably need two assistants, one at $1,000, and one at about $800. Rentals and miscellaneous laboratory expenses would require approximately $1,200, making a total of $5,000.

In this connection I append herewith certain memoranda which is self-explanatory. First, a letter from the Glasgow Corn Trade Association commenting on the bad effect of poor inspection on foreign shipments of grain; second, two sets of tables showing the quantity of wheat and corn exported from our chief ports for the years ending June 30, 1884 to 1904; also a table showing the average exports of the principal cereals of the United States for the five years ended June 30, 1904.

Respectfully, B. T. GALLOWAY, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is not proposed by this amendment to force Federal inspection or a Federal system of grades upon grain dealers. It is proposed, however, to establish Federal grades by induction rather than by statutory requirement. That will be the effect of this amendment if adopted, and grain dealers themselves will soon be demanding Federal certificates of inspection on the grain they handle.

As to the amendment proposed by my colleague, I will say that I have no objection to it. I hardly think it is necessary, because I believe the Secretary, under the amendment reported by the committee, would adopt such rules and regulations as are detailed in the amendment offered by my colleague. I do not see how the Secretary would put the proposed law into operation without adopting rules and regulations such as are described here. However, I do not object to the amendment. I hope the Senator from Vermont will accept it, unless he has serious objection to it.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I think nearly three hours have been consumed in discussing this matter. I think the committee went far enough in the amendment they proposed and that the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota ought not to prevail. I think it is not necessary in order to accomplish the substantial purpose that is desired. These reports, I have no doubt, will be sufficient. It is a beginning. If in another year more is wanted, the law can very easily be strengthened.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of justifying any wrong that may have been perpetrated in the matter of grain inspection; but I am somewhat familiar with this subject both as a farmer and as a producer who has for many years had a little bit of his own wheat to market, and also from the acquaintance I formed with the subject while I was the governor of our State.

The facts are not as bad as the Senator from North Dakota intimates. The great reason why there is a discrepancy between the grades of wheat that come in and go out of the elevators is this: Most of the farmers in North Dakota and most of the wheat farmers in the Red River Valley in my State do not have grain houses on their farms and do not stack their grain. They thrash the grain from the shock. They leave it on the field until they thrash it from the shock, and then they immediately haul the grain to the railroad and ship it in that condition. Any farmer knows that if grain stands in the shock a long time it gets bleached and deteriorates, and especially if it happens to be a rainy or damp fall, with several showers of rain while the grain is in the shock. The grain in that damp and bleached condition is thrashed, and is then hauled to the cars and rushed through to the terminal point, Superior or Duluth. It goes there in bad condition, bleached and overheated, and the first thing the elevators have to do with the wheat is to fan it, to scour it and dry it, and to put it into shape. That is what is done with the wheat which comes there in that condition, after it has stood for weeks and weeks in the shock before being thrashed. It goes there in that condition—bleached, dirty, and heated—and it is in consequence necessarily graded low. They take it into these great elevators in that condition and fan it and dry it, scour it, and fix it up, and, of course, after going through such a process it turns out a better and higher grade. And this to a large extent accounts for the difference in grade of wheat taken in and of wheat turned out from these great terminal elevators.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But it does not increase the quantity. It may increase in quality, but not in quantity. That is what my colleague referred to.

Mr. NELSON. When you come to the matter of quantity, the situation is this: In the old days the farmer used to have a fanning mill on his farm and clean the wheat before he took it to market. Now, and for many years, the farmers take the wheat as it comes from the thrashing machine, without fanning it, to the market, and it is in all sorts of conditions. It has all sorts of foul stuff and foul seed, sand, and dirt in it, and when it comes to the grading of that grain, which is brought in by the wagon load to the elevator, the elevator man has to make a deduction, and "dock," as it is called, for that dirt and foul seed. And this docking takes place in like manner at the terminal elevator. It is a good deal of a matter of guesswork as to the amount that has to be docked. As a rule, the elevator men deduct, or dock, from a half pound to a pound and a half, and often more, per bushel, and these elevator men, who are working on a salary—the men who are buying the grain from the farmers—are held accountable for what grain they take in and ship out, and of course they want to be on the safe side and protect themselves. In the matter of dockage, if they err at all, they are apt to err in their own favor, but this is not so much for the purpose of cheating the farmers as to protect themselves, so that the same quantity of clean wheat shall be there when it is turned out as when taken in.

Formerly the country elevators, where the grain was first received, used to clean the wheat. It would come in from the farms in wagons and be delivered to the country elevators, and these country elevators would take out the foul stuff and clean the wheat before they shipped it. But that system is obsolete. The wheat, in just the condition it comes from the thrashing machine, is carried to the terminal elevator. In those terminal elevators the foul, bleached, and dirty wheat is put through a rejuvenating process. They air it and fan it and dry it and clean it and make it into a better grade. Hence comes this showing to which the Senator from North Dakota has referred. If you take any foul, bleached, and dirty wheat to these elevators, they will, in the nature of the case, turn out a better grade of wheat than they received. This is because the wheat is put through a drying, cleaning, and scouring process in the elevator, and this process is necessary in order to preserve the wheat from becoming heated, bin-burnt, and musty. I do not mean to say that this is always the case. I do not mean to say that there are not cases where wrong is perpetrated, but I say that this method which I have explained accounts for a good deal of the complaint.

Now, another difficulty which has arisen in recent years in the western country, especially in the semiarid belt, is this: They began to raise a new variety of wheat, commonly called "macaroni," or "Durum." I believe that is the technical name. I see it is called over East here by a different name—goose wheat. It is a hard wheat of inferior grade, making inferior flour as compared with standard varieties of spring wheat. The ordinary roller mills in Minnesota and at other points, suitable for such standard spring wheats as Scotch Fife and blue stem, required new machinery to grind this new Durum or macaroni wheat; and owing to this fact and the fact that macaroni wheat would not make as good flour, the millers have refused to buy it. Hence it has had a poor market. The berry is large and plump. To look at it, it looks fine to a man who is not an expert in the other wheat. But it makes an inferior grade of flour, is hard to grind, and requires entirely different machinery for grinding.

The farmers who have gone into the raising of that wheat have encountered difficulties and drawbacks, both as to grades and prices. In the first place, they found it difficult to get a home market for it, and in the next place they found some difficulty, even where they found a home market for it, to get anything near the price of the other wheat for it. Three or four years ago, I think, when macaroni wheat was first introduced and raised, there was a difference, on the average, of 20 cents a bushel. I think the last year it came down to 10 cents a bushel difference between macaroni and good hard wheat, Scotch Fife or blue stem. This difference in price and grade as to this macaroni wheat has created some feeling and prejudice. We have a very good system of grain inspection, so far as the law goes, in Minnesota. We may have some dishonest men in the grain service, but we have a very good system of grain inspection in Minnesota. We have a board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, who not only have jurisdiction over the railroads, but also over the grain elevators and the grading and inspection of grain.

Our earliest and first law provided simply for the inspection of the grain at terminal elevators—at Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth—and not at interior points. The farmers found fault with that system because it did not touch the home—the country—elevators. They said: "We are not fairly treated at our home elevators;" and there was a great agitation in our State upon the subject. Finally I suggested to the farmers that the proper remedy was to give the railroad commissioners the same control and jurisdiction over our country elevators as over terminal elevators; and in 1892, when I was a candidate for governor, I told the people of our State that if I was elected I would prepare a bill and try and get it passed putting all country elevators that handled grain in any shape under a system of State regulation and State inspection.

I drafted such a bill. We passed it through the legislature against great opposition from the elevator men. The bill started out on the theory of requiring every elevator on the right of way that received grain to take out a State license and submit to State control. It was only a dollar a year—enough to put the elevators under the control of the railroad and warehouse commission. That law has been contested in the courts. A case under that law—and I referred to it the other day—known as the "Lanesboro case," went up to the Supreme Court of the United States, in which the elevator company claimed that it was immune from State control because it was doing exclusively its own business, buying and shipping exclusively its own grain; but the Supreme Court of the United States held that being built on the right of way and being a public market place where the farmers came to sell their grain and have it graded and weighed, it was the subject of State control, and the Supreme Court sustained the law.

Since we have gotten that law in the State of Minnesota I have heard very little complaint. I think that law was passed in 1893 or 1894. Now, any farmer in that State who is dissatisfied with the grade or dockage allowed him by the local grain dealer at the local elevator, at his station, can take a sample of his grain and send it down to the secretary of the railroad warehouse commission for the examination and judgment of the State grain board of appeals. We have a State grain board of appeals composed of six men, three of whom are farmers. One section of that board sits constantly at Minneapolis and the other at Duluth. Any man, any shipper or any farmer, who is dissatisfied with the grading either at the interior points or at the terminal points, Duluth and Minneapolis, can immediately appeal to that board of grain appeal. All he has got to do is to take out a sample of his wheat, a small quantity—I think 2 or 4 quarts; I do not remember the exact qauntity—and send it down to that board, and that board will pass upon it, and if any injustice has been done him either in grading or in dockage the board will adjust it and right him, and its decision is binding and final. At the terminal points we have a body of expert inspectors and weighers, experienced and trained men, who inspect, grade, and weigh the grain as it comes in in the cars from the various interior points, who are appointed upon their merits and not through political consideration. These men stand between the buyer and the seller. The old grain-inspection system was under boards of trade and chambers of commerce, who represented the buyers and not the sellers. Under our State system we have State officials who act as umpires between the buyer and seller, between the farmer and the elevator man.

It is possible that a few of these officials have not always done their duty, but, so far as legislation is concerned, so far as public control can be asserted, we have certainly done all that could be done in the State of Minnesota to get a just and fair grading and inspection of grain and to have our farmers treated fairly in this behalf. I can say that since that so-called "country-elevator" law was passed there has been very little complaint. Before 1893, before we passed that law, they would bring this issue of grain inspection into every political campaign and try and make a party question out of it. There were always a lot of political hoboes who wanted to make political capital out of it. Ever since we got that grain-inspection law established in Minnesota that question went out of politics, and there has been very little complaint on the subject. It is with that just as it is with our law regulating railroads. Since we got a railroad commission for controlling railway rates as to local traffic that question has gone out of politics in the same way.

As I said, it may be possible that we have some officials in the grain service of the State of Minnesota who are not honest, but, taking them as a class, they are good, competent, and honest men, and we apply the principle of civil service to them. If a man is appointed on the grain-inspection force, he comes in first as a helper at a salary of $60 or $62 a month. His business is to crawl into the cars on the track and take out a sample and men are put on that force, and when they prove themselves efficient, he is appointed a deputy inspector, and so on, and they are promoted according to their merit without any regard to politics. Our grain force does not know anything about politics. Good men are put on that force, and when they prove themselves efficient we retain them, and we have the best and most efficient grain-inspection service of any State in the Union.

The case the Senator referred to with reference to Superior grew out of these facts: Right at Superior, across the bay from Duluth, there are a great many of the terminal elevators. The great railroads bring wheat from the Dakotas and from Minnesota to these elevators. The roads pass through a little corner of Wisconsin into Superior, and there has lately been a struggle as to whether that wheat should be inspected at Superior, under the Wisconsin law, or under the Minnesota law. Until a year or two ago Wisconsin had no grain inspection at Superior. All the wheat coming from the West to the head of the lake, whether at Superior or at Duluth, was inspected under the Minnesota system, a system well established and known all over the country. But the people of Wisconsin, especially of Superior, thought that they ought to have an inspection of their own, and get some advantage and profit out of it. So they passed a law, and out of that law there came a conflict between the two States, and it was a conflict as to which State should control the subject and secure the fees incident thereto. It wasn't because the Minnesota inspection was bad, but because Superior wanted to do a part of it.

Now, that is all there is in this subject. I want to say in conclusion that I think any man who is familiar with and has looked thoroughly into our system of grain inspection in Minnesota will pronounce it one of the best systems of the kind in any State in the Union.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I move that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this amendment is a makeshift to secure nothing, gotten up by a Mr. Scofield, in the Agricultural Department, who has labored strenuously to get his hobby in some way into law and in a manner that will not, in my opinion, unless you give it some effect, have any force whatever. For that reason, as the result will be simply to prevent the proper legislation upon the merits, I raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I regret that my colleague proposes to take that course with respect to this amendment. I hope he will not insist upon the point of order. I wish to say that this amendment was not drawn by Mr. Scofield. It was drawn by Doctor Galloway and myself, who labored long and arduously over the subject, having the bill offered by my colleague before us, and the bill offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] before us, and all of the information and facts we could get. The result was this amendment. I trust the Senator will not insist upon a point of order against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered could not by any means whatever do anything but make the law effective. It has been stated that by induction the same result was to be obtained as would be obtained in the amendment which I offered. I am not in favor of legislating by induction. I believe that a legislative enactment should state what it means and should mean what it states.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A point of order, under the rules of the Senate, is not debatable. The Chair would ask the Senator from North Dakota to state his point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, Mr. President, at the earnest solicitation of my colleague, I will withdraw the point of order, not that I think this legislation will benefit the people of my section to amount to anything. The only thing that can be said is, as has already been suggested, that it is in the right direction, and by induction the Secretary of Agriculture can do something that you do not empower him to do by direct legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Before passing to the place where we left off in the bill last night, I wish to change the language in lines 20 and 21, on page 23. It now reads:

> In packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine and as may be satisfactory to the Postmaster-General.

I move to amend it by striking out the words "may determine and as may be satisfactory to" and inserting "and the Postmaster-General may jointly determine;" so that the whole clause will read as follows:

> In packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster-General may jointly determine.

It does not change the meaning at all, but it is better phraseology.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, in lines 19, 20, and 21, change the amendment so as to read:

> In packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster-General may jointly determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is on page 28, beginning at line 14. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 2, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry report to insert the following:

That 10 per cent of all money received from each forest reserve during any fiscal year, including the year ending June 30, 1906, shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said reserve is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the forest reserve is situated: Provided, That when any forest reserve is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said reserve shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 23, before the word "property," to strike out "other" and insert "condensed;" and in line 24, after the word "bureaus," to strike out ", the money received from such sales to be deposited in the Treasury;" so as to read:

And hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of said investigations by the Forest Service and for refunds to the contributors of amounts heretofore or hereafter paid in by them in excess of their share of the cost of said investigations, for the employment of fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry, in the administration of forest reserves, and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and he may dispose of photographic prints (including bromide enlargements), lantern slides, transparencies, blueprints, and forest maps at cost and 10 per cent additional, and condensed property or materials under his charge in the same manner as provided by law for other bureaus; for collating, digesting, reporting, illustrating, and printing the results of such experiments and investigations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Chemistry," on page 31, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" on page 32, line 12, before the word "messengers," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred and sixty" and insert "one thousand four hundred and forty;" so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,500; one chief clerk, $1,600; two clerks of class 2, $2,800; one property clerk, $1,600; three clerks of class 1, $3,600; one clerk, $1,000; one library clerk, $900; one assistant property clerk, $900; two clerks, at $840 each, $1,680; three clerks, at $720 each, $2,160; one engineer, $1,200; two messengers, at $840 each, $1,680; three skilled laborers, at $720 each, $2,160; one skilled laborer, $600; one fireman, $600; three messengers or laborers, at $480 each, $1,440; etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 16, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Chemistry, from $27,580 to $28,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 10, after the words "Bureau of Chemistry," to insert:

To investigate the adulteration, false labeling, or false branding of foods, drugs, beverages, condiments, and ingredients of such articles, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable, and also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable.

So as to read:

Laboratory, Department of Agriculture: General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry: Chemical apparatus, chemicals, laboratory fixtures and supplies, repairs to engine and apparatus, gas and electric current, purchase of all necessary office fixtures, supplies, and necessary expenses in conducting investigations in this Bureau, including actual and necessary traveling and other expenses, telegraph and telephone services, for express and freight charges, labor and expert work in such investigations, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; to continue the collaboration with other bureaus and divisions of the Department desiring chemical investigations and to collaborate with other Departments of the Government whose heads request the Secretary of Agriculture for such assistance, and for other miscellaneous work; for the employment of additional assistants and chemists, when necessary, and for the rent of buildings occupied by the Bureau of Chemistry; to investigate the adulteration, false labeling, or false branding of foods, drugs, beverages, condiments, and ingredients of such articles, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable, and also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable; etc.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is very great danger that we will not only duplicate but triplicate different departments of the Government in some of this work. We passed a bill known as the "pure-food bill." It has been very much amended in the House, I understand, and is shortly to come back to the Senate. I do not think that so far as its penalties were concerned the bill was worth the paper it was printed on when it left the Senate. It covers this whole subject. A part of it is already covered by the laboratory of the Bureau of Public Health, and it is incorporated also by way of amendment in this bill. If this bill should become a law, and if the pure-food bill shall be passed, it is duplicated, and without any possible justification. I should like to know upon what theory this amendment is inserted.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, this is precisely the present law. As the pure-food bill had not been passed it seemed advisable to insert here what went out on a point of order in the House.

I will say that this matter shall not go through the conference until the fate of the pure-food bill is determined; and if that bill takes jurisdiction of this matter what is put in here will go out in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, on page 34, line 5, after the word "countries," to strike out "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and for all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries; to investigate, in collaboration with the Bureau of Animal Industry, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 13, after the word "may," to strike out "after notification;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he has reason to believe that any articles are being imported from foreign countries which are dangerous to the health of the people of the United States, or which shall be falsely labeled or branded either as to their contents or as to the place of their manufacture or production, shall make a request upon the Secretary of the Treasury for samples from original packages of such articles for inspection and analysis, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to open such original packages and deliver specimens to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose mentioned, giving notice to the owner or consignee of the sampling of such articles, who may be present and have the right to introduce testimony before the Secretary of Agriculture, or his representative, either in person or by agent, concerning the suitability of such articles for entry.

Mr. SPOONER. Why are the words "after notification" stricken out?

Mr. PROCTOR. Because it seemed to be a repetition in the line above. It reads:

Giving notice to the owner or consignee of the sampling of such articles.

It is not necessary to take it out, but it seemed to be a mere repetition.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty-five;" and in line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the employees of the Bureau of Chemistry outside the city of Washington may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year."

So as to read:

Employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purpose named, $145,920. And the employees of the Bureau of Chemistry outside the city of Washington may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Chemistry, from $158,500 to $174,180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Soils," on page 36, line 17, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" and in line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand eight" and insert "three thousand six;" so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Soils: One soil physicist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,500; one chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks, class 4, $3,600, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Soils, from $34,660 to $36,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 19, after the word "waters," to strike out "and of methods for the prevention of the accumulation of and injury from seepage waters in irrigated districts;" so as to read:

Soil investigations: General expenses, Bureau of Soils: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; for the investigation of the cause and prevention of the rise of alkali in the soils of the irrigated districts; the investigation of the relation of soils to drainage and seepage waters, etc.; for investigations of soils and for indicating upon maps or plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 3, after the word "fermentation," to strike out:

To originate, through selection and breeding, improved varieties for the principal tobacco districts of the United States, and to secure, as far as may be, a change in the methods of supplying tobacco to foreign countries.

So as to read:

To map the tobacco soils of the United States; to investigate the soils and conditions of tobacco growth in Cuba, Sumatra, and other tobacco-competing countries; to investigate, in cooperation with the Bureau of Plant Industry, the methods of curing, with particular reference to fermentation; to investigate, with the view of improving, the conditions relating to the supply and sale of domestic tobacco to any foreign country or countries where the business of buying and selling tobacco is conducted by the government; the location of the stations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for soil investigations, on page 38, line 22, to increase the amount from $185,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 22, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in experimental work in raising tobacco in Onondaga County, State of New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Soils from $219,660 to $236,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Entomology," on page 39, line 14, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "three clerks;" in line 15, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand two" and insert "three thousand six," and in line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eighteen thousand four" and insert "twenty thousand eight;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Salaries, Bureau of Entomology: One Entomologist, who shall be chief of Bureau, $3,000, and for additional compensation while the office is held by the present incumbent, $250, $3,250; one chief clerk, $1,800; three clerks, class 2, $4,200; one artist, $1,400; three clerks, class 1, $3,600; five clerks, at $1,000 each, $5,000; one messenger, $840; one messenger, $720; in all, $20,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the appropriations for entomological investigations, on page 40, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-eight" and insert "eighty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which sum $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in investigating the insect affecting orange groves and known as the "white fly."

So as to read:

Preparing, illustrating, and publishing the results of the work of the Bureau $80,000, of which sum $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in investigating the insect affecting orange groves and known as the "white fly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Entomology from $86,410 to $100,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 2, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Division of Publications from $247,300 to $248,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 3, to insert as a heading "Bureau of Statistics."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the appropriations for collecting agricultural statistics, on page 48, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety-three" and insert "one hundred and eight;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That the condition reports of the cotton crop shall be issued on the same day as the first ginners' report of actual cotton ginned in each month, respectively, during the months in which both condition reports and ginners' reports are issued, $108,000, of which not more than $20,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Statistics from $195,560 to $210,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of Experiment Stations," on page 53, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and ninety-nine thousand six hundred and sixty" and insert "eight hundred and twelve thousand one hundred and twenty;" in line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-one thousand six hundred and sixty" and insert "twenty-five thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

Agricultural experiment stations: To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," and to enforce the execution thereof, $812,120, $25,500 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Secretary of Agriculture, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 13, before the word "employ," to insert "rent offices and to;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to rent offices and to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "fifty-three;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend $53,000 of which sum to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations from $799,600 to $812,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "thirteen thousand six hundred and twenty;" and in line 5, after the word "institutes," to insert "and agricultural schools;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That $13,620 of this sum shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the organization and progress of farmers' institutes and agricultural schools in the several States and Territories, and upon similar organizations in foreign countries, with special suggestions of plans and methods for making such organizations more effective for the dissemination of the results of the work of the Department of Agriculture and the agricultural experiment stations and of improved methods of agricultural practice. And the employees of the experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leave of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 19, to insert:

Nutrition investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the nutritive value of the various articles and commodities used for human food, with special suggestions of full, wholesome, and edible rations less wasteful and more economical than those in common use, including special investigations on the nutritive value and economy of the diet in public institutions; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and the agricultural experiment stations are authorized and directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out said investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be warranted by a due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories, and as may be mutually agreed upon; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to require said stations to report to him the results of any such investigations which they may carry out, whether in cooperation with the said Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Office of Experiment Stations from $951,020 to $963,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 13, to insert the following heading: "Office of Public Roads."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of Public Roads," on page 57, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" in line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one instrument maker, $1,200;" in line 20, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks;" in line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one thousand two" and insert "two thousand four;" and on page 58, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, Office of Public Roads: One director, who shall be a scientist and have charge of all scientific and technical work, $3,000; one chief of records, $1,800; one editorial clerk, $1,200; two clerks, class 1, $2,400; three clerks, at $1,000 each, $3,000; two clerks, at $720 each, $1,440; in all, $12,840.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 4, before the word "systems," to strike out "the;" in line 15, before the word "not," to strike out "a building" and insert "buildings;" in line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "two thousand;" and in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "forty-seven thousand six" and insert "sixty-two thousand one;" so as to make the clause read:

Public roads: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to systems of road management throughout the United States; to furnish expert advice on road building; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kinds of road-making materials in the several States; to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations and experiments; for preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins and reports; for rent and repairs of buildings not to exceed $2,000; for necessary office fixtures and supplies, apparatus, and materials; telegraph and telephone service, traveling and other necessary expenses, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $62,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Office of Public Roads from $60,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Department of Agriculture from $7,146,440 to $7,370,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 24, to increase the appropriation to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy moth from $65,000 to $75,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to increasing the appropriation contained in that amendment to $100,000. The State of Massachusetts alone is appropriating from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand dollars for this purpose. The pest has spread into four States. I will therefore move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$100,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 24, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "one hundred thousand;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy moth, $100,000, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as this wretched pest, which devours everything before it, has reached my State, I trust the amendment to the amendment will prevail. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I own a half acre of rocks and sand in Massachusetts. If I had more, I should be poorer. I received not long since an official notice, to which I paid no attention except to send it to my representative up there. There are a few scrub trees on the lot to which I refer, and the notice was that certain things should be done to destroy the gypsy moth; which I thought would entail considerable expense. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is a State law or a county or town act which requires individuals to contribute to such expense.

Mr. LODGE. There is a State law which, through the town governments, requires all persons to clean the trees on their places.

The brown-tail moth ought to be included in this legislation. The State of Massachusetts itself has already spent over a million dollars in the effort to check it. We have, by quite a large expenditure of money, confined its area, but the brown-tail and gypsy moths have now spread into Rhode Island, Connecticut, and New Hampshire, and I think they have even got as far as Maine. They have been destructive in the highest degree; and it is to the interest of every State in the Union to aid the New England States in checking the further extension of this pest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. In the text of the bill, in line 23, after the word "gypsy," I move to strike out the word "moth" and insert "and brown-tail moths."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, at the end of line 23, it is proposed to strike out "moth" and insert "and brown-tail moths;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 61, line 13, after the word "For," to strike out "the Bureau of Forestry" and insert "Forest Service;" so as to read: "For Forest Service."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and eighty-one thousand four hundred and forty" and insert "seven hundred and fifteen thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

The total amount of this bill is $7,715,000.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the total in lines 21 and 22 $740,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 61, after line 22, to insert:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish, upon application, prints from negatives in the possession of the Department and to charge for such prints a fee to cover the cost of preparation, such fee to be determined and established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the money received from such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 61, line 24, in the amendment of the committee, after the word "prints," I move to insert "and lantern slides;" in line 25 to strike out "such prints a fee" and insert "the same a price;" and on page 62, line 1, strike out the word "fee" and insert the word "price." It is simply a change of wording.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61 it is proposed to amend the amendment, in line 24, after the word "prints," by inserting "and lantern slides;" in line 25, after the words "charge for," to strike out the words "such prints a fee" and insert the words "the same a price;" and on page 62, line 1, after the word "such," to strike out the word "fee" and insert the word "price;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to furnish, upon application, prints and lantern slides from negatives in the possession of the Department and to charge for the same a price to cover the cost of preparation, such price to be determined and established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the money received from such sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 62, after line 13, to insert:

The act of Congress approved March 16, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditures thereof," shall be construed to appropriate the sum of $5,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, the sum of $7,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, the sum of $9,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, the sum of $11,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, the sum of $13,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and the sum of $15,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. The sum of $5,000 appropriated for the fiscal year 1906 shall be paid on or before June 30, 1906, and the amounts appropriated for the subsequent years shall be paid as provided in the said act to each State and Territory for the more complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural experiment stations now established or which may hereafter be established in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 2, 1887.

Mr. PROCTOR. After the word "appropriate," in line 18, I move to amend the amendment by inserting "for each station."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, after the word "appropriate," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting the words "for each station."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. PROCTOR. Turning back to page 13, in lines 21 and 22, after the word "that," I move to strike out "the Secretary of Agriculture may construe the provisions of;" in line 25, after the word "thereof," to insert the words "shall be deemed;" and in line 1, on page 14, before the word "may," to insert "the Secretary of Agriculture." It is merely a change of words. It would seem to be more proper to say that "the act shall be deemed to apply" than to say that "the Secretary of Agriculture may construe."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 21, after the word "that," it is proposed to strike out "the Secretary of Agriculture may construe the provisions of;" in line 25, after the word "thereof," to insert the words "shall be deemed;" and on page 14, line 1, before the word "may," to insert "the Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. I ask to return to page 57, line 10, where I move to amend the bill by inserting the word "twenty" between the words "and" and "two," so that the total appropriation for irrigation and drainage investigations will be "$122,200."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 10, after the word "and," it is proposed to insert "twenty;" so that the total will read "$122,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. On page 58, line 22, I move to insert the word "eighty" instead of "seventy-five."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a committee amendment which has been agreed to; but, without objection, it will be considered as open to amendment. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 22, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "eighty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 61.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 19, page 61, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

For the extension of forest planting on forest reserves, the sum of $15,000, of which not to exceed $2,500 may be used to construct a permanent station building on the Dismal River Forest Reserve, Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 37.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after the word "laboratory," in line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct experiments to ascertain what crops can be most profitably grown, and to demonstrate the best methods of cultivating them in the irrigated districts opened for settlement under the terms of the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. On page 33, line 10, before the word "adulteration," I move to insert the word "composition."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment having been agreed to, the proposed amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is not now in order; but, without objection, the amendment will be regarded as open. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 10, before the word "adulteration," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the word "composition."

Mr. LATIMER. I should like to know the effect of that amendment.

Mr. KEAN. The only effect of that amendment will be to provide for the investigation of the composition of these foods, drugs, etc., and to let people judge for themselves whether or not they are adulterated and injurious.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 10, before the word "adulteration," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the word "composition;" so as to read:

To investigate the composition, adulteration, false labeling, or false branding of foods, drugs, beverages, condiments, and ingredients of such articles, when deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture advisable, and also the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of food preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, and to publish the results of such investigations when thought advisable.

Mr. LATIMER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. There are two or three amendments which I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Vermont. Is the bill in the Senate now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I thought it had been reported to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to a provision in the bill, on page 23, which I will suggest to the chairman of the committee needs some change. I myself do not like to interfere with amendments on a bill of this kind, but I should like to suggest to the Senator who has the bill in charge——

Mr. SPOONER. The provision to which the Senator refers has been changed.

Mr. TELLER. I am told that has been changed. Was the provision on page 13 also changed? If not, I desire to suggest an amendment on page 13.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it about "construing?"

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. That has been changed.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On line 15, page 15, after the word "dollars," I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 15, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made, by inspectors appointed for that purpose, as hereinafter provided, a post-mortem examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats to be prepared for human consumption, at any slaughtering, canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishment in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States for transportation to or sale in any other State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States; and the carcasses of all said animals found to be sound, healthful, and fit for human food shall be marked, stamped, tagged, or labeled as "inspected and passed," which mark, stamp, label, or tag shall show on its face the date on which it was affixed; and said inspectors shall label, mark, stamp, or tag as "inspected and condemned" all carcasses and parts of carcasses of animals found to be unsound, unhealthful, or otherwise unfit for human food, and shall cause to be destroyed and personally superintend the destruction of all carcasses or parts of carcasses of animals found to be unsound, unhealthful, or otherwise unfit for human food; and said inspectors, after said first inspection, shall, when they deem it necessary, reinspect said carcasses or parts of carcasses or the food products thereof to determine whether since the first inspection the same has become unsound, unwholesome, or in any way unfit for human food, and if any carcasses or any part thereof or any food product made therefrom shall, upon examination and inspection subsequent to the first examination and inspection, be found to have become unsound, unwholesome, unhealthful, or otherwise unfit for human food, said inspectors shall cause to be destroyed and personally superintend the destruction of the same notwithstanding said first inspection.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made by inspectors appointed by him for that purpose an inspection and examination of all food products prepared in any slaughtering, canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishment for interstate commerce, and for the purposes of such examination and inspection said inspectors shall have access to every part of said establishment; and said inspectors shall mark, stamp, tag, or label as "inspected and passed" all such products as upon inspection are found to be pure, sound, wholesome, and made up of healthful ingredients and fit for human food, which mark, stamp, tag, or label shall show on its face the date on which it was affixed; and said inspectors shall label, mark, stamp, or tag as "inspected and condemned" all such products as upon inspection are found to be impure, unsound, unhealthful, or otherwise unfit for human food, and shall cause to be destroyed and personally superintend such destruction of all food products which upon examination and inspection are found to be impure, unsound, composed of unhealthful ingredients, or which have been treated with or contain any dyes or deleterious chemicals of any kind or which are otherwise unfit for human food.

That all slaughtering, canning, salting, packing, rendering, or similar establishments in which cattle, sheep, swine, and goats are slaughtered and the meat and meat food products thereof are prepared for interstate or foreign commerce shall be maintained in a sanitary manner, according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; and it shall be the duty of the inspectors herein provided for to inspect the sanitary conditions of said establishments as well as the animals slaughtered and the food products therein prepared, as directed by and in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That no cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, or meat or meat food products thereof which have not been examined and marked as "inspected and passed," in accordance with the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be brought into or allowed to enter any slaughtering, packing, canning, salting, rendering, or similar establishment where cattle, sheep, swine, and goats are slaughtered for food purposes or meat food products are prepared for interstate or foreign trade; and it shall be the duty of the inspectors herein provided for to refuse to stamp, mark, or label any carcasses or any part thereof, or meat food products thereof prepared in such establishment until the same have actually been inspected and found to be sound, healthful, and fit for human food, and none but healthful materials and ingredients fit for human food shall be included in or mixed with or into the composition of any food product prepared in any such establishment; and no food product shall be sold or offered for sale by any person, firm, or corporation engaged in interstate commerce under any other than a true name which shall accurately describe said food product; and no carcass, meat, or meat food product which has issued from any establishment where meat or meat food products are prepared for interstate commerce for sale shall be returned to the same or any similar establishment without again being subjected to inspection in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That on and after January 1, 1907, no person, firm, or corporation shall transport or offer for transportation, and no carrier of interstate commerce shall transport or receive for transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States or to any foreign country, any carcasses, meat, or meat food products thereof which have not been inspected, examined, and marked as "inspected and passed," in accordance with the terms of this act and with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; and no person, firm, or corporation which engages in the interstate commerce of meat or meat food products shall transport or offer for transportation, and no carrier of interstate commerce shall transport or receive for transportation from said person, firm, or corporation, from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States or to any foreign country, any carcasses or meat or meat food products unless the slaughtering, canning, packing, salting, rendering, or other similar establishment owned, leased, or operated by said firm or corporation engaged in the interstate commerce of meat or meat food products shall be maintained in a sanitary condition according to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture as provided in section 111 of this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, at periods by him prescribed, furnish to such person, firm, or corporation owning, leasing, or operating such establishment a certificate stating that such establishment or establishments have been inspected and approved, as provided by section 111 of this act, which certificate shall be sufficient evidence to any carrier of interstate commerce that said establishments therein described are maintained in the sanitary condition provided for in section 111 of this act.

That when any meat or meat food product prepared for interstate commerce which has been inspected as hereinbefore provided and marked "inspected and passed" shall be placed or packed in any can, pot, tin, canvas, or other receptacle or covering, the person, firm, or corporation preparing said product shall cause a label to be attached to said can, pot, tin, canvas, or other receptacle or covering containing said meat or meat product, which label shall state that the contents thereof have been inspected and passed under the provisions of this act and the date of such inspection and packing or canning; and no inspection and examination of meat or meat food products deposited or inclosed in cans, tins, pots, canvas, or other receptacle shall be deemed to be complete until such meat or meat food products under the supervision of said inspector has been sealed in said can, tin, pot, canvas, or other receptacle.

That no person, firm, or corporation, or officer, agent, or employee thereof, shall forge, counterfeit, simulate, or falsely represent, or shall without proper authority use, fail to use, or detach, or shall knowingly or wrongfully alter, deface, or destroy, or fail to deface or destroy any of the marks, stamps, tags, labels, or other identification devices provided for in this act, or in and as directed by the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder by the Secretary of Agriculture, on any carcasses, parts of carcasses, or the food product thereof subject to the provisions of this act, or any certificate in relation thereto, authorized or required by this act or by the said rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause an inspection and examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the food products thereof slaughtered and prepared in the establishments hereinbefore described for the purposes of interstate commerce or for export to foreign countries, to be made during the nighttime as well as during the daytime when the slaughtering of said cattle, sheep, swine, and goats or the preparation of said food products is conducted during the nighttime, but no slaughtering or preparation of meat or meat food products shall be done during the nighttime except in cases of emergency; and such inspectors as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct shall have access during the nighttime as well as the daytime to every part of any establishment hereinbefore described without reference to whether or not any slaughtering or other work is being done therein.

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prescribe and fix reasonable fees for the inspection and examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and meat and meat food products thereof, maintained in accordance with the provisions of this act, which fees shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate which, as nearly as possible, will serve only to defray the cost of said inspection and examination, and the said fees shall be uniform throughout the United States and shall be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be deposited in the Treasury; and a schedule of such fees, together with the rules and requirements relating to the collection thereof, shall be set forth in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The fund thereby created shall be subject to the requisition of the Secretary of Agriculture, as if appropriated by Congress, for the necessary expenses of carrying out the provisions of this act and shall continue permanently available until used.

That the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may cause to be made an examination and inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats which are to be slaughtered and the meat and meat food products thereof are to be used in interstate commerce; and all cattle, swine, sheep, and goats found on such inspection to show symptoms of disease shall be set apart and slaughtered separately from all other cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, and when so slaughtered the carcasses of said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats shall be subject to a careful examination, all as provided by the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture as herein provided for.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause to be made a careful inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats intended for export to foreign countries at such times and places and in such manner as he may deem proper, to ascertain whether such cattle, sheep, swine, and goats are free from disease.

And for this purpose he may appoint inspectors, who shall be authorized to give an official certificate clearly stating the condition in which such cattle, sheep, swine, and goats are found.

And no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board cattle, sheep, swine, or goats for export to a foreign country until the owner or shipper of such cattle, sheep, swine, or goats has a certificate from the inspector herein authorized to be appointed, stating that the said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats are sound and healthy, or unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall have waived the requirement of such certificate for export to the particular country to which such cattle, sheep, swine, or goats are to be exported.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall also cause to be made a careful inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats and their carcasses, the meat of which, fresh, salted, canned, corned, packed, cured, or otherwise prepared, is intended for export to any foreign country, at such times and places and in such manner as he may deem proper, to ascertain whether said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats are healthy and their meat sound and wholesome.

And for this purpose he may appoint inspectors, who shall be authorized to give an official certificate stating the condition in which said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, and the meat thereof, are found.

And no clearance shall be given to any vessel having on board any fresh, salted, canned, corned, or packed beef, mutton, pork, or goat meat, being the meat of animals killed after the passage of this act, for export to and sale in a foreign country from any port in the United States, until the owner or shipper thereof shall obtain from an inspector appointed under the provisions of this act a certificate that the said cattle, sheep, swine, and goats were sound and healthy at the time of inspection, and that their meat is sound and wholesome, unless the Secretary of Agriculture shall have waived the requirements of such certificate for the country to which said cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, or meats are to be exported.

That the inspectors provided for herein shall be authorized to give official certificates of the sound and wholesome condition of the cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, their carcasses and products as herein described, and one copy of every certificate granted under the provisions of this act shall be filed in the Department of Agriculture, another copy shall be delivered to the owner or shipper, and when the cattle, sheep, swine, and goats or their carcasses and products are sent abroad, a third copy shall be delivered to the chief officer of the vessel on which the shipment shall be made.

That no person, firm, or corporation engaged in the interstate commerce of meat or meat food products shall transport or offer for transportation, sell or offer to sell any such meat or meat food products in any State or Territory or in the District of Columbia or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States, other than in the State or Territory or in the District of Columbia or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States in which the slaughtering, packing, canning, rendering, or other similar establishment owned, leased, operated by said firm, person, or corporation is located unless and until said person, firm, or corporation shall have complied with all of the provisions of this act.

That any person, firm, or corporation, or any officer or agent of any such person, firm, or corporation, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished on conviction thereof by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment for a period not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall appoint from time to time inspectors to make examination and inspection of the sanitary conditions of all carcasses and all meats and meat-food products thereof and all establishments in which such meat and meat-food products hereinbefore described are prepared; and said inspectors shall receive such salaries and perform such duties as provided by this act and by the rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary of Agriculture; and said Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act, and all inspections and examinations made under this act shall be such and made in such manner as described in the rules and regulations prescribed by said Secretary of Agriculture.

That any inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, the meat and meat-food products thereof directed to be made in this act shall be subject to appeal from the decision of the inspector making such inspections to the inspector in charge located at such establishment in which such inspection so complained of is made; and from the decision of said inspector in charge an appeal shall lie directly to the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, at Washington: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon his own motion, at any time, consider any case so appealed or may direct the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture to so consider any such case, and the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture or of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, acting under his directions as herein provided, shall be final and conclusive.

That any person, firm, or corporation, or any agent or employee of any person, firm, or corporation, who shall give, pay, or offer, directly or indirectly, to any inspector, deputy inspector, chief inspector, or any other officer of the United States authorized to perform the duties prescribed by this act or by the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture any money or other thing of value, with intent to influence said inspector, deputy inspector, chief inspector, or other officer of the United States in the discharge of any duty herein provided for, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said fine and imprisonment; and any inspector, deputy inspector, chief inspector, or other officer of the United States who shall accept any money, gift, or other thing of value from any person, firm, or corporation, or officers, agents, or employees thereof, given with intent to influence his official action, or who shall receive or accept from any person, firm, or corporation engaged in interstate commerce any gift, money, or other thing of value given with any purpose or intent whatsoever, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be summarily discharged from office and disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding three years, or by both said fine and imprisonment.

That none of the provisions of this act shall be so construed as to apply to any animals slaughtered by any farmer upon his farm, which may be transported from one State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States, into any other State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, however, That the carcasses of all such animals shall not be allowed to enter any slaughtering, canning, packing, salting, rendering, or similar establishments where meat-food product is prepared for transportation to any other State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or to any foreign country, as hereinbefore provided, unless the same are duly inspected under the provisions of this act; and the provisions of this act relating to the inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats and the products thereof shall include, so far as applicable, dairy products intended for export to any foreign country, and the provisions of this act in relation to marking, stamping, labeling, or otherwise identifying and the penalties for forging, counterfeiting, simulating, or imitating or using without authority such marks, labels, stamps, or other identification marks shall apply to dairy products intended for export to a foreign country.

That all acts and parts of acts which conflict with the terms of this act are hereby repealed, and this act, except as herein otherwise provided, shall take effect upon its passage and approval.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the last paragraph ought not to go in, it being an amendment. I refer to the repealing clause.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as suggested. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 13, insert the following:

Provided, That an investigation shall be made by said Bureau into the effects on health of undrawn fowls and animals sold as food, report to be made to Congress at its next session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the Secretary change the totals where the appropriations have been increased on the floor of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, it is so agreed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I submit a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota submits a conference report, and asks that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15331) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 27, 30, 32, 37, 41, 48, 51, 58, 62, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 91, 93, 109, 113, 115, 117, 137, 138, 140, 141, 142, 146, 154, 178, 179, 180, 181, 195, 197, 203, and 204.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 33, 35, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 49, 53, 54, 55, 57, 59, 60, 61, 63, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 78, 81, 83, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 92, 94, 97, 99, 100, 101, 104, 105, 107, 108, 110, 111, 112, 114, 119, 120 121, 122, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 148, 149, 150, 151, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 163, 164, 165, 167, 168, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 182, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 192, 193, 194, 196, 198, 199, 200, and 201; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 strike out "upon the petition" and insert "prior to the expiration of the trust period."

In line 5, after the word "best," insert "Provided further, That this shall not apply to lands in the Indian Territory."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 strike out "to be subjected to" and insert "for."

In line 7, after "Interior," strike out all that follows, including the word "hereunder," in the last line.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "ninety-three" and insert "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "ninety-three" and insert "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 34: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 strike out "expenses in connection therewith" and insert "including expenses."

In line 7 strike out "also" and insert "and."

In line 8 strike out "a comprehensive irrigation system" and insert "an irrigation system and storage system."

In lines 10 and 11 strike out "including consideration of a possible storage system."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out all of said amendment and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell or dispose of unallotted lands in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho.

"That as soon as the lands embraced within the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation shall have been surveyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments of the same to be made to all persons belonging to or having tribal relations on said Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, to each man, woman, and child one hundred and sixty acres, and, upon the approval of such allotments by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents to issue therefor under the provisions of the general allotment law of the United States.

"That upon the completion of said allotments to said Indians the residue or surplus lands—that is, lands not allotted or reserved for Indian school, agency, or other purposes—of the said Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation shall be classified, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as agricultural lands, grazing lands, or timber lands, and shall be appraised under their appropriate classes by legal subdivisions, and upon completion of the classification and appraisement such surplus lands shall be opened to settlement and entry, under the provisions of the homestead laws, at not less than their appraised value, in addition to the fees and commissions now prescribed by law for the disposition of lands of the value of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which these lands shall be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof: Provided, That the price of said lands when entered shall be fixed by the appraisement, as herein provided for, which shall be paid in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash at the time of entry and the balance in five equal annual installments to be paid in one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry; and in case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, promptly when due all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the lands shall be reoffered for sale and entry: Provided, That the right to commute by said entryman shall be allowed as to any lands classified as agricultural and grazing lands, but the entryman, upon commutation, shall not be required to pay in the aggregate any sum in excess of the appraised value of such lands; and nothing in this act shall be held to repeal or extend the provisions of the homestead laws permitting the entryman to cut and remove, or cause to be cut and removed, so much timber as is actually necessary for buildings, fences, and other improvements on the land entered: Provided further, That the general mining laws of the United States shall extend after the approval of this act to any of said lands, and mineral entry may be made on any of said lands, but no such mineral selection shall be permitted upon any lands allotted in severalty to the Indians: Provided further, That all the coal or oil deposits in or under the lands on the said reservation shall be and remain the property of the United States, and no patent that may be issued under the provisions of this or any other act of Congress shall convey any title thereto: Provided further, That the lands remaining undisposed of at the expiration of five years from the opening of the said lands to entry shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash, at not less than one dollar per acre, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that any lands remaining unsold ten years after the said lands shall have been opened to entry may be sold to the highest bidder for cash without regard to the above minimum limit of price: And provided further, That sections sixteen and thirty-six of said lands be, and they are hereby, excepted from the foregoing provisions and are hereby granted to the State of Idaho for school purposes, and the United States shall pay to said Indians therefor the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre: And provided also, That if the State of Idaho has made any selections under existing law in lieu of sections sixteen and thirty-six of the lands affected by this act the acreage of such selections shall be deducted from the acreage to be paid for under the preceding proviso.

"That the said lands shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, and enter any of said lands except as prescribed in such proclamation.

"That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve from said lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, such tracts for townsite purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause any such reservations or parts thereof to be surveyed into blocks and lots of suitable size, and to be appraised and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, and the net proceeds derived from the sale of such lands shall be paid to said Indians as provided in section seven of this act.

"That the net proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, including the sums paid for mineral and town-site lands, shall be, after deducting the expenses incurred from time to time in connection with the allotment, appraisement, and sales and surveys herein provided; deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Coeur d'Alene and confederated tribes of Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and shall be expended for their benefit, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the education and improvement of said Indians and in the purchase of stock cattle, horse teams, harness, wagons, mowing machines, horserakes, thrashing machines, and other agricultural implements for issue to said Indians, and also for the purchase of material for the construction of houses or other necessary buildings, and a reasonable sum may also be expended by the Secretary, in his discretion, for the comfort, benefit, and improvement of said Indians: Provided, That a portion of the proceeds may be paid to the Indians in cash per capita, share and share alike, if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior such payments will further tend to improve the condition and advance the progress of said Indians, but not otherwise: Provided, That any sums placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians shall bear interest at the rate of three per centum per annum, which interest shall be expended in the same manner as the principal.

"That any of said lands necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, including any lands now occupied by the agency buildings, and the site of any sawmill, gristmill, or other mill property on said lands are hereby reserved for such uses so long as said land shall be occupied for the purposes above designated: Provided, That all such reserved lands shall not exceed in the aggregate three sections and must be selected in legal subdivisions conformable to the public surveys, such selection to be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his approval.

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make all needful rules and regulations as to the manner of sale, notice of same, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act, and with authority to reappraise and reclassify said lands if deemed necessary from time to time, and to continue making sales of the same, in accordance with the provisions of this act, until all of the lands shall have been disposed of.

"That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to bind the United States to find purchasers for any of said lands, it being the purpose of this act merely to have the United States to act as trustee for said Indians in the disposition and sales of said lands and to expend or pay over to them the net proceeds derived from the sales as herein provided.

"That to enable the Secretary of the Interior to allot, classify, appraise, and conduct the sale and entry of said lands as in this act provided the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sales of the aforesaid lands: Provided, That when funds shall have been procured from the first sales of the land the Secretary of the Interior may use such portion thereof as may be actually necessary in conducting future sales and otherwise carrying out the provisions of this act."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE COINAGE.

Mr. LODGE. In accordance with the notice I gave yesterday on reporting the bill, I desire to call up the bill (S. 6243) to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled "An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands." It is a unanimous report. There is no objection to the bill, and immediate action is very important.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is a very long bill.

Mr. LODGE. It is a bill of only two pages, but is an extremely important measure. It has a unanimous report. It has been submitted also to the Committee on Finance and has their approval and that of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. It is a very short bill. It will not take ten minutes.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the words "Philippine Islands," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the weight and fineness of the silver peso to be coined in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not be reduced below 700 parts of pure silver to 300 of alloy.

So as to make the section read:

That, with the approval of the President of the United States, the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, whenever in its opinion such action is desirable, in order to carry out the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 2, 1903, entitled "An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands," to change the weight and fineness of the silver coins authorized by said act, and may in its discretion provide a weight and fineness proportionately less for subsidiary coins than for the standard Philippine pesos, and may also in its discretion recoin any of the existing coins of the Philippine Islands at the new weight and fineness when such coins are received into the Treasury or into the gold standard fund of the Philippine Islands: Provided, That the weight and fineness of the silver peso to be coined in accordance with the provisions of this section shall not be reduced below 700 parts of pure silver to 300 of alloy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 19, after the word "coin," to strike out the words "or of gold coin of the United States;" and in line 21, before the word "certificates," to strike out the word "silver;" so as to read:

That section 8 of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1903, entitled "An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands," as amended by section 10 of an act approved February 6, 1905, is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the treasurer of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to receive at the treasury of the government of the said islands or any of its branches deposits of the standard silver coins of 1 peso authorized by this act to be coined in sums of not less than 20 pesos, Philippine currency, and to issue certificates therefor in denominations of not less than 2 pesos nor more than 500 pesos, and coin so deposited shall be retained in the treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and for all public dues in the Philippine Islands, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any banking association in said islands may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 2, to strike out the first proviso in the following words:

Provided, That the gold coin so deposited may be retained in the treasury or deposited by the treasurer of the Philippine Islands in authorized depositories of funds of the treasurer of the Philippine Islands in the United States on such security as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That the treasurer of the Philippine Islands, with the approval of the governor-general, may substitute for any part of such silver pesos hereafter deposited, gold coin of the United States legally equivalent in value, and redeem the certificates hereafter issued in either silver pesos or such gold coin of equivalent value at the option of the Treasurer: Provided further.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17507) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18026) permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to the bill, but I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota how many bills of this character he has had passed during the present session?

Mr. NELSON. Quite a number. I can not recall the number.

Mr. KEAN. If I remember rightly, I should say about ten.

Mr. NELSON. This is the last one.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATION OF PURE SWEET WINES.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15266) to amend existing laws relating to the fortification of pure sweet wines.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read heretofore.

Mr. STONE. It is open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE. On page 2, line 14, after the word "sugar," I move to insert the words "or pure anhydrous sugar."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. On page 2, line 22, after the word "sugar," I move to insert the words "or pure anhydrous sugar."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TALLAHATCHIE RIVER, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18439) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, Miss.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN FRUITA, COLO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 4400) to grant certain lands to the town of Fruita, Colo.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 11, after the word "Colorado," to insert "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre by said town to the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the following-described tract of land, situate in the county of Mesa and State of Colorado, namely, sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, or so much thereof as may be desired, in township 14 south, range 102 west of the sixth principal meridian, containing 7,680 acres, more or less, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the town of Fruita, in the county of Mesa and in the State of Colorado upon the payment of $1.25 per acre by said town to the United States, to have and to hold to its use and behoof forever for purposes of water storage and the supply of water for the use of said town; and for these purposes the town of Fruita shall forever have the right, in its discretion, to control and use any and all parts of the premises herein conveyed, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning the preservation of forest reserves and in the construction of reservoirs, laying such pipes and mains, and in making such improvements as may be necessary to utilize the water contained in any natural or constructed reservoirs upon such premises: Provided, however, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued hereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises, or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the right to convey water in pipes across the public lands from the aforesaid tract of land to the aforesaid town of Fruita, is also hereby granted to that town.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (3) 2, on page 2, line 25, after the word "supply," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That said town shall not have the right to sell, convey, or lease the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That nothing shall authorize the cutting or removal of timber from said lands, and it shall be the duty of the town of Fruita on accepting this grant to provide for the proper protection of the forests on the same, and said lands shall not be used for any purpose save that of the protection of the water supply: Provided, That said town shall not have the right to sell, convey, or lease the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIRECTOR OF RECLAMATION SERVICE.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17833) providing for the administration of the operations of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act."

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. KEAN. This is rather an important bill, and I think it had better go over.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me that it is a bill too important to be taken up now at this time.

Mr. KEAN. I have just made that suggestion, I will say to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw my request, in view of the wish of Senators to look into the bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUTTE, MONT.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4716) appropriating $15,000 for acquiring additional ground and necessary improvements for the same for the Federal building at Butte, Mont.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the procuring of additional lands for the enlargement of the site and for necessary improvements for the public building at Butte, Mont."

CENSUS STATISTICS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12064) to amend section 7 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Census with amendments, on page 2, line 7, before the word "sex," to strike out "name, age," and insert "age;" in line 18, after the word "industries," to strike out "to life, fire, marine, casualty, and other insurance;" and on page 3, line 13, after the word "repealed," to insert: "And the data to be included in the Official Register, which is now required to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, shall hereafter be transmitted to the Director of the Census;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of the act of March 3, 1899, entitled 'An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses,' the Director of the Census is hereby authorized decennially to collect statistics relating to the defective, dependent, and delinquent classes; to crime, including judicial statistics pertaining thereto, provided that such statistics shall include information upon the following questions, namely: Age, sex, color, race, nativity, parentage, literacy by race, color, nativity, and parentage, and such other questions relating to these subjects as the Director in his discretion may deem proper; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to transportation by water, and express business; to mines, mining, quarries, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining and quarrying industries; to savings banks and other savings institutions, mortgage, loan, and investment companies, and similar institutions; to the fishing industry in cooperation with the Bureau of Fisheries; and every five years to collect statistics relating to street railways, electric light and power, telephone, and telegraph business. And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under the subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end; and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as 'Special Reports of the Census Office.' For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided. And the Director of the Census shall edit, index, and publish the Official Register of the United States, and the provisions of existing law imposing that duty upon the Department of the Interior are hereby repealed, and the data to be included in the Official Register, which is now required to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior, shall hereafter be transmitted to the Director of the Census."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the vote:

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota with Mr. HUNT.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill referred to in the resolution which has just been read is what is popularly known as "the rate bill." It is a matter of common knowledge that it passed the House almost unanimously and went to the Senate some seven or eight weeks ago. It comes back now with fifty Senate amendments and is on the Speaker's table. The purpose of this rule, if adopted, is to take that bill from the Speaker's table, nonconcur in all the Senate amendments, and send the bill to conference. That is all there is in the rule. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PALMER. Suppose a man wants to vote to concur in some of the amendments and to nonconcur in others?

Mr. DALZELL. This rule prevents that.

Mr. PALMER. You have got to take the whole dose?

Mr. DALZELL. In the absence of this rule there would be of course a possibility of debate on fifty amendments. The House will of course have an opportunity to pass upon the question of the amendments on the report of the conferees.

Mr. PALMER. There will be some opportunity somehow or other to debate the amendments?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly. This has no reference to anything in connection with the bill except the present procedure.

Mr. PALMER. When the report of the conference committee comes in, suppose you introduce another rule of a similar character to cut off all debate in the same way you are doing now, how about that?

Mr. DALZELL. I can of course only speak for myself, but, in the first place, a rule amounts to nothing unless the House adopts it, and, in the second place, I do not believe there is a disposition on the part of anybody to do any such thing.

Mr. BARTLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman with a view of getting the parliamentary situation as it would be before us in the conference report. Suppose now, to illustrate, that the amendment which I understand the Senate has added to the bill providing for including within the terms of the bill express companies—an amendment which very many of us voted for when the bill was here—suppose now the conferees bring in a report in which the Senate amendment placing express companies in the bill is eliminated? What opportunity then would we have after they have made that sort of a recommendation to vote in favor of including in the bill express companies?

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the House, of course, can disagree to the conference report and can instruct its conferees.

Mr. WILSON. It would defeat the entire bill if we were to disagree to the conference report.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not this rule, if the gentleman will permit a further interruption, be regarded by the conferees, and ought they not in fact regard this vote, if we adopt this procedure, as an instruction to the conferees that the House is opposed to all of the Senate amendments?

Mr. DALZELL. By no manner of means. Speaking for one of the Committee on Rules, there are some of these amendments that personally I should vote to concur in right now.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to vote to concur in some of them.

Mr. DALZELL. It is a mere question of procedure to facilitate the public business. Has the gentleman, or any other gentleman in this House, any idea that we are going to adjourn until the rate bill is disposed of?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. I want to reach a parliamentary situation that will give us all an opportunity to vote for any of these amendments that we favor.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman will have that opportunity under the rules of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if, under the rules, no matter what the conferees agree to or disagree to, the House will not be called to vote up or vote down the report as a whole and will not be permitted to vote for any separate amendment? In other words, under the rules of the House, as they have been construed, we will be compelled to vote for the report as a whole?

Mr. DALZELL. The House can vote down the conferees' report and instruct the conferees as to anything in the report.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that. The House will not get an opportunity, if we adopt these rules, to vote for any one of these amendments separately. If we had them before us now, we could say whether we are in favor or opposed to them.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman knows that under the rules of the House the House will have an opportunity to pass on every amendment the Senate has suggested.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that we could instruct the conferees later. What earthly objection is there to giving the House an opportunity to instruct the conferees now? [Applause.] Why not vote now on the express-company amendment, that every man in this House who wants regulation of transportation desires?

Mr. DALZELL. We can not very well allow any particular amendment to be voted on at this time, and unless we do follow the mode of procedure that is suggested we will run into a discussion of fifty amendments right away. I have no idea that any gentleman will be disappointed as to having a vote on any particular amendment he wants at the proper time. I think it is not customary to instruct conferees in advance of a full and free conference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to make one statement?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have to say this, that I have been informed by a gentleman in whose word I place implicit confidence that gentlemen—I am not saying whether members of the Senate or of the House—who will, under the rules that obtain in the respective bodies, be upon the conference, have in conversation said that in so far as they have the power the express-company amendment shall go out—that they were heard to say so.

Mr. DALZELL. I know nothing about that, but I do not take much stock in the expression of what a single Member of the House is going to do. The House is in control of the bill at all times.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House is in a hurry to adjourn. Suppose the conferees hold this up for two or three weeks, until tacitly we have agreed that we will adjourn on the 15th or 20th of June. There will be then no opportunity for debate, because everybody will be in a hurry to get home.

Mr. DALZELL. There will be an opportunity for debate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] permit me for a moment to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to state the persons that have thus declared themselves?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not wish to offend especially the feelings of the gentleman from Iowa, and——

Mr. HEPBURN. You will not offend my feelings, sir, by answering that question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will then say to the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. HEPBURN. Name them out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am not going to name a man who came to me and told that story. The gentleman from Iowa is one of the men who was said to have remarked in conversation that the express amendment will go out.

Mr. HEPBURN. I say that any man who has told the gentleman that statement stated a falsehood [applause], and I am inclined to believe that, until the name of that individual is given, the gentleman may be drawing upon his imagination. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman from Iowa to order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the language that is offensive to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not offensive to the "gentleman from Mississippi" at all; it is offensive to the House.

The SPEAKER. The language is withdrawn. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just one minute to reply to the gentleman from Iowa. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Iowa, that I am not the only person to whom that statement has been made. There are other Members of the House to whom that statement has been made. There is no object, can be no specific purpose on my part, to deliberately misstate that——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment; you have no right to interrupt me at this point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. In view of the fact——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has not yielded.

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman has not yielded. The House will be in order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not understand how the gentleman from Iowa ever propounded that question, unless he had heard that this statement was going around. He put me in a very embarrassing position. But I told him what was told to me; I told exactly the truth as told to me; and this is the first time that any man, anywhere, ever accused me of deliberately telling a falsehood. This is a thing which was said to me in confidence, in a conversation I had with a gentleman who said: "I would not like my name mentioned in this connection."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURPHY. Is not this the fact: "It is manifest, therefore, that if we are to have speedy legislation and adjustment of the differences between the two Houses the bill must be at once sent to conference, and that is the purpose of the rule I have introduced?"

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MURPHY. I am reading from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as found on page 4224 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on the rule sending the statehood bill to conference.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I say that this is a very simple matter. That bill is now on the Speaker's table with fifty amendments. There is a great diversity of opinion as to whether a number of these amendments should be accepted or should be rejected, but whether they shall be accepted or whether they shall be rejected we have to meet this question. With the gentleman from Mississippi in the saddle, and with his idea of statesmanship, under which the gentleman ties up the House by opposition, we could have separate votes on each of these fifty amendments to the bill. It is entirely within the power of the House to vote upon the conferees' report and refuse to accept the conference report, and then the whole matter will be open and within the control of the membership of this House to amend the bill until it is in just such shape as the majority of the House desire to have it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman reserves his time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended just at this moment to say anything, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania has rendered it necessary that I should before I yield to anybody else. As I understood him, he tried to gather partisan strength upon that side by asking the question "What condition this bill would be in if the gentleman from Mississippi, with his revolutionary methods," I believe was the language——

Mr. DALZELL. I did not say "revolutionary methods." I said "with his ideas of statesmanship."

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Ideas of statesmanship," then. I want to quote the gentleman exactly right—"if the gentleman from Mississippi, with his ideas of statesmanship, were put in the saddle by voting down this special rule?" Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not such a child as to imagine that giving the House a right to vote upon a motion to concur in one or more of these Senate amendments would "place the gentleman from Mississippi in the saddle." He knows that it would simply place the House of Representatives in the saddle. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And the gentleman from Pennsylvania, moreover, knew from what had occurred in the Committee on Rules that the gentleman from Mississippi was perfectly willing, if only there were an opportunity furnished to the House to vote to concur upon Senate amendments 2, 6, 31, 47, and 48, that all the balance of the Senate amendments might, without objection, go to the conference as amendments nonconcurred in. Gentlemen, do not let that sort of thing fool you, whatever else fools you——

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Mississippi certainly does not claim that the House is to be bound by his particular wishes. Other gentlemen have a right to their opinions as well as he.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi does not claim that the House would be bound, but the gentleman from Mississippi claims that, so far as his position is concerned, he would be bound, and that therefore there was no reason in fact or in truth for the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the effect that the gentleman from Mississippi would be put in the saddle. The House would be put in the saddle, and that is what the gentleman and men in this Hall who are opposed to the Senate amendment putting express companies in the bill as common carriers and to some other amendments of the Senate, in which this House upon a free vote would concur at once; that is what they are trying to avoid. You want the Committee on Rules and the conferees to be in the saddle to ride the House bitted and spurred. You do not want the House to be in the saddle. If I consented right now that every single Democrat should leave this Hall, and that no point of "no quorum" should be made, you dare not put even that side of the House in the saddle for a day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is at once a very simple and a very important one. It is the question whether the House will pass upon some of these amendments itself or whether it will commit them to the uncertainties of a conference. That is the plain, simple question.

The importance of this legislation or of the subject with which this legislation deals can hardly be overstated.

In the other end of this Capitol weeks and months were spent in discussion and consideration of this measure. A number of amendments were added to it. Some of them, I am sure, should meet with the hearty concurrence and approval and indorsement of every man in this House, and of every man out of this House who wishes effective railroad rate legislation. As has already been suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], my colleague on the Committee on Rules, so far as we upon this side are concerned, I believe that with a vote now upon two or three or four or five of these amendments, it would be satisfactory to us to let the others go to conference, if that be insisted upon. What are they? They are very easily understood. One is amendment No. 2, that the term "common carrier" shall include express companies and sleeping-car companies. [Applause.] Now, a man ought to know whether he is for that or against it. We are for it. I believe the House is for it. If so, why send it to conference? Why take the chance or the risk of what may be done in conference concerning it? The man who votes against giving himself the opportunity to vote upon that amendment here in the House now, for the time being votes against it and takes the chance of having or not having the opportunity to vote for it later, if he really wishes to vote for it at all.

Now, take amendment No. 6. That provides that common carriers shall furnish switch facilities. Who is in favor of that, and who is against it? We are in favor of it. I believe the House is in favor of it. Why not let us determine by vote here? Why send it to a conference committee, with its hazards and its chances, in the closing days of a session to determine whether or not that wholesome and just amendment shall remain in the bill and become a part of the law.

Take amendment No. 31. It strikes out the words "fairly remunerative;" a catch trap those words are, making room for litigation, room for uncertainty, room for thwarting, if possible, the will of the people with respect to this bill. Why not vote upon that? We are in favor of the amendment which strikes those words out.

No. 47 provides that there shall not be incorporated in the receipt or bill of lading any words, however carefully chosen or however skillfully covered, which will exempt the railroad company from its ordinary common-law liability. [Applause.] Who is in favor of that, and who is against it? We are in favor of that amendment. It is not onerous on the railroads, it is not unjust, it is not rash; it is decent and fair and corrective and improving in this bill. We are in favor of it. I believe the House is in favor of it. Why commit to the chances and hazard of this committee performance that amendment?

Then, there is an amendment, No. 48, which strikes out the section in the bill when it went from this House, unnecessarily providing that each of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners shall receive $10,000 a year instead of $7,500, and that there shall be seven instead of five Commissioners. I would like to see a vote upon that, and would like to vote for it.

But are you willing to give us a vote upon anything? Are you willing yourselves to vote upon anything? Or are you in favor of turning over every amendment, no matter how important, to the hazard, and juggling, and chances, and uncertainty, and the influence that may prevail against fair consideration, in this committee of conference? That is the question, and nothing can take us away from it. A vote upon the one side is a vote to give this House an opportunity to do what it chooses to do, and a vote upon the other side is to deny it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KLEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one minute that I may ask him a question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his colleague's time be extended one minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is in addition to the usual forty minutes?

The SPEAKER. Yes; is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. What is the question, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his colleague's time be extended one minute to answer a question.

Mr. PAYNE. That is in addition to the forty minutes?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, one minute ought to be added to the time for debate on this side.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KLEPPER. I want to ask my colleague if it is not a fact that quite a number of the minority, including the leader of the minority, did not vote to exclude express companies on the passage of the bill in the House, and if that be true, why they are agonizing over this subject and objecting to its going to conference?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am asked a question as to what somebody else did, and somebody else thought, and about what somebody else thinks now. That kind of a question I can not answer, but I will say to the gentleman that when he or any other man votes to send this to conference without an opportunity to vote upon it, he votes for excluding from this classification the express companies and the car companies.

Mr. KLEPPER. I will say to the gentleman that I voted to include express companies, and if I remember correctly the minority leader voted to exclude express companies. I for one am willing to submit the matter to the conferees, believing that they will recommend that which is just and proper.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope I will have an opportunity to answer the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] three minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the condition of this proposition under the rule is this: The rate bill is on the table, and the rules of this House provide that House bills with Senate amendments, which do not require to be considered in Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine. It is now in the power of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to call the rate bill from the table, and the House to consider each of these amendments without a special rule, where the House will be able to vote up or down each of the amendments, as it deems best in its judgment. The effect of this special rule is to take that power away from the membership of the House, put it in the hands of the conferees, composed of three members of the House and three members of the Senate, sitting behind closed doors, where nobody in this House or nobody in the United States can know what is being done, and when they come back with their report, if it is a full and complete report, such as they will bring to this House, the membership of the House will be confronted with the question, Will you accept the bill as it is reported from the committee of conference or not? We will have to swallow their report whole, good or bad, or be put in the attitude of voting against a rate bill, and if the majority passes it in that shape, there will be no explanation. When this matter was before the House of Representatives I moved in the House to include express companies within the terms of the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the chairman of the committee, and the chairman of the conference committee of this House when it is appointed, fought that proposition and said the Hepburn bill did not include express companies and he was not in favor of putting them in the bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I say to this House, if you are honestly and earnestly in favor of putting these express companies within the terms of the bill, are you going to put that in the hands of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who openly and aboveboard has told you on the floor of this House, when this bill was last before it, that he was not in favor of the proposition? Can you justify yourselves before your constituents in such circumstances?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he proposes to use the balance of his time in one speech?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has eight minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has six minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of that eight minutes, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in line with what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has just said, I would also beg to remind the House that while the original bill was pending here an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and one or two others—there were two or three amendments—putting express companies within the purview of this bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] had said to the House that express companies were not included in the bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] thought they were, as did also my colleague [Mr. ESCH], the gentleman from Wisconsin. In my remarks I called attention to the fact that the phraseology of the bill did not include express companies, unless the original act included them, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission had always held that express companies were not included under the original act. I called attention also to the fact that a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with whom I had had a conversation on that day, told me that there was no question that express companies were not included under the terms of the then pending bill. When the amendment to include express companies came up, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] voted against it, in line with the remarks which he made, as just narrated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Now, why should any gentleman who wants express companies included and who wants to stop the infamous discriminations which they now practice, vote to turn the whole question over to conferees to bring in such a report as they please? Gentlemen are not obliged to do this. The rules do not require it. How can any gentleman who honestly does not wish to have express companies omitted from the law vote to send this proposition to a conference that may be hostile to his views? When are you to get the report—in two weeks, three weeks, four weeks? What will it contain?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has already outlined what amendments 2, 6, 31, 47, and 48 are. These are the amendments which we as minority members of the Committee on Rules asked that the House should have a right to vote upon in a motion to concur. We still insist on that right. We therefore oppose this rule. It is very true that I did vote against amendments like this, some of them almost identical with them, upon the floor, but it was because—and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will bear me out in that statement—for tactical and strategic purposes we had thought it important to send this rate bill, with all the weight and influence of this House, like a catapult against the other side of this Capitol, so that the utmost influence might be had to bring forth a bill. It was not because there was ever a minute of my life when I or a majority of the Democrats on this side were not in favor of these propositions embodied in the Senate amendments. I will answer the question the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KLEPPER] asked his colleague [Mr. DE ARMOND]. The gentleman from Mississippi voted against all amendments to the Hepburn-Davey House rate bill because he was in honor bound to stand by the bill as it had been agreed upon and to vote against all amendments, and on that day I and a majority of us over here voted against half a dozen amendments that we were in favor of, as everybody knew. It may probably be difficult for the gentleman to understand, but not difficult for a Democrat to understand, that a man may do that which he otherwise does not want to do in order to keep faith and in order to keep honor, and the six Democratic members of the committee and I did exactly that thing. What was the result? We did bring the weight of this House like a catapult to bear, with the President and public opinion behind that catapult, as well as ourselves, and Senators fell over themselves in order to out-Herod Herod in giving us what we and what the people wanted and what we had feared that a majority of the Senate did not want. There was no mistake made when for tactical purposes we came together in a nonpartisan bill, and the Republicans adopted in the bill several things which they did not want, and we left out of the bill several things which we did want, and keeping faith with one another as men of honor should, we stood by the bill, I and the six Democratic members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Mr. Speaker, this has come back a better bill than it went out, and we want to keep it good. It has been said—I know not with how much truth—that when these amendments were being adopted it was whispered at the other end of the Capitol, "Oh, that is all right; let it go; the conferees will take care of that."

Now, I do not want the conferees to take care of it. Voting down this rule is the first, perhaps the only, opportunity to concur upon these five propositions, 2, 6, 31, 47, and 48, and to drive a nail through the plank and clinch it on the other side. Gentlemen say they want something in conference "to trade upon." Well, I do not want them to trade about either one of those five amendments; neither does this House of Representatives want them to do it. They all say so. There are many who say they would vote to concur; if so, why not do it now? I may be excused for not being able to understand a man who says he is in favor of a proposition and then, when the opportunity is offered to him to make that proposition irrevocably good upon the statute books, refuses the opportunity. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the House will have "an opportunity" later on "to vote." Will the House have it? Who knows it? Will or will there not be another rule to gag the House? Why, you know there will be another rule, provided only that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the Committee on Rules desire to have another rule. It is true the House might at that time vote down the second rule, but the House might at this time vote down this rule; and if in blind partisanship it will avoid the first opportunity to do what it says it wants to do, what reason have we to believe it would avail itself of it in the second case? This is your first chance; take advantage of it. The next chance will be the Aldrich chance. Now, there are only two possible reasons why the House shall not be given an opportunity to vote to concur upon the five Senate amendments, the character of which have been outlined by the gentleman from Missouri. One is that somebody may want to imitate the game that was played at the other end of the Capitol. At the last moment, after having used patriotic Representatives as a lever to procure the desired legislation—to keep the fight alive—they at the last moment attempted to put the stamp of partisanship upon a great measure, which was advocated first by the Democrats, and which is more earnestly favored by them now than by any other people. That may be one reason, and the next reason would be to leave the final molding of a bill to the uncertainty and secrecy of conferees, through whom these amendments might be killed, scotched, or emasculated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the balance of my time to my colleague [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say, for a moment, that I agree entirely with the gentleman from Mississippi in the suggestion that the vote upon any one of these amendments that were offered in this House to the bill when it was under consideration does not indicate the views that the individual voting might have upon the subject. It will be remembered that it was the effort of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report to the House a bill that would embody the recommendations of the President and place them into law—that much and nothing more. Everything else beyond that was opposed by the committee. There was an agreement of the entire eighteen members of the committee that they would oppose any amendment and strive to secure the bill as reported. The gentleman from Mississippi, patriotic in his anxiety to get such a bill as the President had asked for, united with us in that purpose, and in accordance with the plan every one of the amendments was voted down, without regard to the individual views of us who voted against them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact the gentleman from Pennsylvania said he would close in one speech.

Mr. DALZELL. I yielded my time to the gentleman from Ohio and I assumed that he would use the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You also yielded to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DALZELL. No, sir; the gentleman from Ohio yielded to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just want the record to show the occurrence.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather unbecoming of the gentleman to quibble about a minute's time being yielded to the gentleman from Iowa, who has been so bitterly assailed here on the floor, to explain his position. Now, Mr. Speaker, the situation is practically this: The organization of this House is responsible for the progress and dispatch of business. We have a bill here with fifty-one amendments. We have a gentleman on the other side who is supreme in the minority, with power enough to demand the yeas and nays upon every question, who can take this bill and upon these fifty-one amendments could occupy the time of the House for six days and a half by the call of the roll. And he has not for a long time failed to demand a call of the roll whenever he has had an opportunity. Now, I respectfully submit to gentlemen on this side if it is not about time that the Republican majority of this House should take possession of the House and transact its business on its own hook and in its own way, or is it wise to turn over to a faction, full of the idea of filibustering as a remedy for its minority, the future of this important legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know what for. I do not intend that the gentleman shall make any more speeches.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not intend to make a speech. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ask it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Would the gentleman consent to permit these six amendments to be voted upon by the House if I repeated here what I had offered to do in the Committee on Rules, to wit, to give unanimous consent that the balance should be nonconcurred in and go to conference?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not willing that the Republican majority of this House shall waive their prerogative and turn it over to the gentleman from Mississippi. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have had enough of that. If we are coming out of this session of Congress with any self-respect, let alone the respect of the country, it is time we attempted to do business ourselves and not permit other gentlemen to dictate to us. And then—just think of it, gentlemen. Here is the minority, representing about 125 votes, and the gentleman from Mississippi stands up calmly and deliberately and picks out the amendments he wants to vote upon, and demands that his dictation shall be heard by the House, and when it is not heard, then he pours out the vials of his wrath here. Now, let us proceed in an orderly way, just as we have done a hundred times in the memory of many of us—disagree to all of the amendments and send the bill to conference.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is certainly seeking a point of attack. This House has the power to bring back the members of that committee at any time it sees fit to do so. We are not in the hands either of the Democratic minority or in the hands of a conference committee. Is there a man here who by his vote will doubt that that conference committee will at a very early date report this important bill back? And let me make a statement, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the House to hear what I say and measure my language—when that conference report comes back there will be a chance to vote on every amendment the House desires to vote upon, and there will be debate, and for once in my life I think I occupy a position where I can enforce the suggestion which I have made. But I desire to disclaim on the part of the majority of the Committee on Rules the slightest intention of gagging a bill through this House. Many of us are strongly in favor of the very amendments that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has spoken about, and you have all heard the explanation made by the gentleman himself that entirely exonerates the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] from having placed himself in a position of hostility to the particular amendment which the gentleman has seen fit to point out. He voted against any amendment, and I can go a little further and say that he appealed to me not to offer an amendment that I had prepared, and which would have made this bill, in my humble judgment, far better than it was when it left the House, and I refrained from offering it simply and solely for the purpose of aiding the passage of the bill and getting it into the hands ultimately of the committee of conference.

The committee may go out and agree or disagree on certain points and come back again. I recollect very well that on a certain night here we voted down a conference report five times, and stayed here until nearly morning, and ultimately, upon the damand made by the House, we saved the Government of the United States from the disgrace of having to report for duty to a vagabond crowd in the island of Cuba. I hope the committee will be sustained in this report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 105, answered "present" 14, not voting 118, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced.

For balance of the day:

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. ELLERBE.

On this vote:

Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Can I be recorded as present?

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; I was not. I did not know but what there was a question of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I was not in to record my vote. I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] voted?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I withdraw my vote in the negative.

The name of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was called, and he voted "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment of the following conferees: Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17220. An act providing for a recorder of deeds, and so forth, in the Osage Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory;

H. R. 17758. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 19473. An act authorizing the use of the waters in Coosa River at Lock No. 4, in Alabama.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 17453. An act entitled "An act for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials;"

H. R. 4546. An act entitled "An act ceding to the city of Canon City, Colo., certain lands for park purposes;"

H. R. 18502. An act to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water, in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto;

H. R. 17127. An act entitled "An act to provide for the subdivision and sale of certain lands in the State of Washington;" and

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6165. An act granting to Beaver Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Ekalaka, Mont., certain land for public cemetery purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6025. An act for the relief of the Holly Manufacturing Company, of Buffalo, N. Y.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 6004. An act to provide an American register for the steam yacht Waturus—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 4698. An act for the preservation of American antiquities—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1178. An act providing for the resurvey of a township of land in Colorado—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PENSION BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar, in order to-day, be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection is made, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 15.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-eight gentlemen have arisen. Not a sufficient number.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There is no other side. The roll has just been called, showing a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there was a division just before this showing no quorum.

The SPEAKER. But the yeas and nays which have just been called show largely over a quorum. The ayes have it, and the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] will take the chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Since the yeas and nays have been taken there has been a division of the House showing no quorum, and I want to make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To make the point of order that the House is not in Committee of the Whole, because it was thrown into the Committee of the Whole upon the supposition that the last division of the House showed the presence of a quorum, whereas as a matter of fact the last division of the House showed that there was no quorum present.

Mr. DALZELL. No point of no quorum was made.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Mississippi fully appreciates the fact that the present occupant of the chair has no information upon the point that he has raised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. "The gentleman from Mississippi" appreciates that, but he also appreciates that the Chair can not throw the House into the Committee of the Whole by the announcement that there is a quorum present when the last division showed less than a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair can not pass upon what took place in the House, as he was not in the chair at the time. The Clerk will report the first bill.

REUBEN VAN BUSKIRK.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 6421) granting an increase of pension to Reuben Van Buskirk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Reuben Van Buskirk, late of Company D, Eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Eighth," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 103, noes 34.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. SULLOWAY and Mr. WILLIAMS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 21.

Accordingly the committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying aside the bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, has the bill been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES E. TOMPKINS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15542) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Tompkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles E. Tompkins, late of Company A, First Regiment California Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 81, noes 14.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is no quorum present in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-four gentlemen present—a quorum. The ayes have it, and the committee amendment is agreed to.

The question is upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB SHEIL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 15105) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Sheil.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Sheil, late of Company H, Eighteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report in that case read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. BRADLEY), as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15105) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Sheil, submit the following report:

An increase of pension from $17 to $40 per month is sought in the bill.

It appears from the files of the Pension Bureau that the soldier named in the bill, now 67 years of age, who served as a private in Company H, Eighteenth New York Infantry, from May 17, 1861, to May 28, 1863, when honorably discharged with his company, and who again served as a private in Company A, Twenty-fifth New York Cavalry, from December 29, 1863 to June 27, 1865, when honorably discharged, and who received a gunshot wound of the left hand in action at Fredericksburg, on December 13, 1862, is now pensioned under the general law at $17 per month on account of said wound, with loss of the second finger.

This rating of $17 per month was allowed in April, 1904, commencing from December 30, 1903, and was based upon a certificate of medical examination made by the Middletown, N. Y., board of surgeons on the last-named date, which board described his condition as follows:

"Ball entered on inside of left hand, passing directly through. The second proximal finger and metacarpal bone removed. The cicatrix on the back of the hand is smooth in the center, adherent to bone and tendons of fingers. The cicatrix extends between fingers around the palm of hand, 4 inches long. The flexor and extensor tendons are adherent to the cicatrix. About one-half loss of motion of wrist from adhesions. He can not grasp objects smaller than 2½ inches in diameter. He has very little use of this hand. He does not show any recovery. Rate, $17.

"Says he has had rheumatism about ten years. Left knee very stiff; one-fourth loss of motion. Elbow joints enlarged. All joints crepitate. No contracted muscles. Heart's action feeble. Has hypertrophy, with general cyanosis and slight dyspnœa. Rate, $18."

The affidavit of Dr. Robert O. Beakes, of Mamakating, N. Y., filed with the committee, sets forth that the soldier now suffers from left-sided hemiplegia, following an attack of cerebral hemorrhage of about one year ago; that voluntary movements of upper and lower extremities are exceedingly limited; that the soldier is confined to his bed or to a chair, being unable to walk; that there is marked contracture of the left wrist and finger joints and eczema of the lower extremities, and that at times the soldier is suffering from paralysis of the vesical sphincter, with dribbling of urine.

Other proof filed shows that the soldier requires the constant aid and attendance of another person; that the total value of his property will not exceed the sum of $1,000; that the annual net income therefrom will not exceed $30, and that he is dependent upon his pension.

Relief to the extent of increasing the soldier's pension from $17 to $36 per month is warranted in view of his helplessness and destitution. The passage of the bill is therefore recommended when amended as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-six."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD (during the reading of the report). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. BURLESON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will complete the reading of the report.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were—ayes 82, noes 11.

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the Chair observed more than a sufficient number to make a quorum present and not voting, therefore the Chair announces that there is a quorum present and that the committee amendments are agreed to. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were—ayes 83, noes 14.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 83, the noes 14, and at least twelve or thirteen present and not voting.

Mr. BURLESON. I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announces that there is a quorum present.

Mr. BURLESON. A parliamentary inquiry. By what process does the Chair reach the conclusion that there is a quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. By a process that the Chair has never yet found to fail—by an actual count. Accordingly the bill is laid side with a favorable recommendation, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES H. MORRILL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13631) granting an increase of pension to James H. Morrill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Morrill, late of Compay F, Seventy-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, in place of reading the report, I want to say a few words. This morning the yeas and nays were called, and after they were called, showing a quorum and more than a quorum of the House, there was subsequently a division of the House showing that there was no quorum. In spite of the intervening business, the Speaker went back to the yea-and-nay vote as a test of the number of the membership in the House. In addition to that reason which, in my opinion, would justify the consumption of time of the House, as a protest, I have very much at heart getting the Senate statehood bill either put on as a rider upon some appropriation bill in the Senate, or else reported by the conferees, subject to the action of the House. But notwithstanding all that, this being private-pension day, and not being desirous to arm demagogues with material whereby they could hurt Democratic Members of the House from the Northern States, because of votes taken under my leadership that might appear to be not votes merely pro forma in opposition, as they are, but votes really in oppositon to the bills, I wanted to say that I have concluded not to carry out the programme of the minority so strictly this morning. But I want it to be understood that I do not abate one jot or tittle of my desire to get the statehood bill out, nor my desire to make the business of the House as slow and troublesome as possible until it does come out, nor do I abate one jot or one tittle of my protest against the usurpation of power on the part of the Speaker when he throws the House into Committee of the Whole without due observance of the rules of the House and in the actual absence of a quorum, as shown by the last division preceding the point of order and by the visible depleted state of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALBERT H. BRADISH.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 13466) granting an increase of pension to A. N. Bradish.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of A. N. Bradish, late of Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and lieutenant, Company H, Fifty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infanry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the initials "A. N." and insert in lieu thereof the words "Albert H."

In the same line and in line 7 strike out the words "of Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "second."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Bradish."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL KEARNS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10808) granting an increase of pension to Michael Kearns.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Kearns, late of U. S. S. Tuscumbia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "and," insert the words "United States Navy."

In same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES HOLDERBY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10902) granting an increase of pension to James Holderby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Holderby, late of Company H, Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARTIN L. HOLCOMB.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 10604) granting an increase of pension to Martin L. Holcomb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin L. Holcomb, late of Company K, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL PALMER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 12347) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Palmer.

The bill was read, as follows:

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the report in that case read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report, if there be no objection.

The report (by Mr. SAMUEL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18324) granting a pension to Charles H. Lunger, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

Charles H. Lunger, of Prospect avenue, Milton, Pa., was a private in Company C, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, from May 7, 1898, to October 31, 1898, in the war with Spain, and on September 9, 1904, he filed an application for pension declaring that at Dunn Loring, Va., about August 17, 1898, he contracted typhoid fever, resulting in rheumatism, disease of heart, stomach, and liver.

The medical records show that claimant was sick in First Division hospital August 17, 1898, and was sent home on thirty days' furlough on August 18, 1898, and the diagnosis as his ailment at that time appears as remittent fever. Upon examination preliminary to muster out the claimant certified that he was then suffering from heart trouble and general weakness, the result of typhoid fever incurred August 17, 1898, at Camp Alger, Virginia, and the medical officer making the examination certified that claimant had been ill at Camp Alger, First Division hospital, in August, and was then sent home on sick furlough; that he went to bed at once and remained there six weeks from typhoid fever, and that at the time of examination at discharge he was still debilitated, but the physician certified that his examination did not disclose any disease of heart.

A great deal of evidence has been submitted which clearly shows that the claimant suffered from typhoid fever as alleged, and the proof seems to be conclusive that he has been much incapacitated for earning a support by manual labor continuously since. The testimony not only includes that of claimant's neighbors and associates, but also that of physicians and of the druggists selling him medicines.

Upon medical examination by the Lewisburg, Pa., board, October 19, 1904, it was found, however, that a pensionable disability did not exist from either of the alleged causes, except disease of heart, for which a rating of $8 per month was recommended. The claim filed at the Pension Bureau was rejected January 9, 1906, on the ground that a ratable degree of disability has not been shown since date of filing claim from disease of stomach or liver or rheumatism, and the evidence had failed to establish the alleged disease of heart as of service origin. Since this rejection a great deal of testimony has been furnished tending to overcome the ground of disallowance, but the Pension Bureau has sustained that action, and the Secretary of the Interior has affirmed the same on appeal.

There being no question that the claimant was treated for typhoid fever in the service, and in the light of his own claim at date of muster out that he was then suffering from disease of heart, and taking into careful consideration the other evidence in the case, it is believed that so much of the claimant's allegations as refer to said disease may be accepted as sufficiently established and that he should be granted a pension according to the degree of disability existing from said cause, as provided by section 4720 of the Revised Statutes. The passage of the bill is therefore recommended when amended as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some member of the Committee on Pensions upon what principle they act in reporting these bills? In other words, what evidence is sufficient to entitle a claimant to have his bill favorably reported? I see the chairman of the committee is on the floor now, and I would like to ask him what evidence is deemed sufficient to justify that committee in reporting favorably a pension bill to this House? I would like to get information upon that subject, if the chairman will give it.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, this is a pension bill granting a pension to Charles H. Lunger, and I would say in reply to the gentleman from Virginia that it would seem to me that the report upon this bill is very clear indeed in regard to the merits of the case. The medical records show that the soldier was sick and in the hospital and was sent home under furlough, and a diagnosis of his case shows that he was taken with remittent fever. Upon examination preliminary to muster out the claimant certified that he was then suffering from heart trouble and general weakness.

Mr. FLOOD. On the contrary, the physician certified that his examination did not disclose any disease of the heart, and the report shows that. I have not seen the evidence, but it is in your report that the physician says he did not disclose any disease of the heart.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The report says that upon examination preliminary to muster out the claimant certified that he was then suffering from heart trouble and general weakness, the result of typhoid fever incurred on August 15, 1898, at Camp Alger, Virginia. The medical officer making the examination certified that the claimant had been ill at Camp Alger in first division hospital August 17, 1898. The report goes on further to say that "a good deal of evidence has been submitted before the committee which clearly shows that the claimant suffered from typhoid fever as alleged, and the proof seems to be conclusive that he has been much incapacitated for earning a support by manual labor continuously since he came out of the service."

Mr. FLOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a minute, I will say the report has been read. The information I want to get from him is what is the principle upon which a bill is reported from that committee? In other words, when a bill is introduced into this House and referred to the Committee on Pensions, what do you require as proof in order to justify a favorable report?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is generally necessary to prove to the satisfaction of the members of the committee that the benefit claimed by the applicant is based not only upon service, but for disabilities received, and that testimony must be of a nature that will satisfy the members of the committee that it is correct.

Mr. FLOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this bill for a few minutes if the gentleman has finished, and I want to state in the beginning that I am not opposed to the passage by this House of any meritorious pension claim, and I have never made a sufficient study of this subject to know what this committee deems meritorious; but I do know that there seems to be something wrong in the method which the committee applies in passing upon cases before it. I have had the duty imposed upon me of introducing a bill for the relief of Hansford G. Gilkeson, a Spanish-American soldier, that was referred to that committee. The proof of every essential which the chairman says is necessary in order to justify a favorable report is ten times as strong as is the proof in the Lunger case. There is more evidence on every point, and it is more direct. The affidavits I hold in my hand prove that Mr. Gilkeson entered the military service of the United States in absolutely perfect health in April, 1898, a month before the claimant in the pending bill did so; that at Jacksonville, Fla., he was attacked with some trouble the nature of which is not known to this day—it is some character of paralysis—and that at that time and in camp while in Jacksonville he was affected just as he is affected to-day, except his malady has grown worse. He was discharged in November, 1898, a month after this claimant was discharged. He has been affected the same way ever since, and has never been able from that time to this to do one minute's physical work. All of this is proved by sworn statements made by the officers and some privates of his company, by physicians in Virginia who saw him immediately upon his return home in November, 1898, and by a number of absolutely reliable people in the community in which Gilkeson now and has always lived.

I will read the statement of the second lieutenant, Mr. Carter Braxton, who is now the attorney for the Commonwealth for the city of Staunton, Va. It is as follows:

I was second lieutenant of Company K, Second Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Hansford G. Gilkeson was a private in my company. My company was encamped at Jacksonville, Fla., and while there, about August, 1898, the said Gilkeson was taken sick, and as a result, while he was still in the military service of the United States, he became completely disabled, as I personally saw, showing the same symptoms as now he has in a more aggravated form. I saw Gilkeson frequently up to the time of his discharge from the service, and have seen him frequently since that time down to date, and I know that he is so completely disabled as to be unable to earn his living either by manual labor or otherwise.

I will also state that he successfully passed the physical examinations preliminary to being mustered into the service, and that he was apparently perfectly healthy and strong.

Similar statements are made by the captain of his company and by the privates in his company. The nurse in the hospital at Jacksonville certified that he was sick in the hospital at the time he was there, and that his trouble was in the stomach and legs, just as it is now.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the nurse state what the nature of the sickness was?

Mr. FLOOD. Did the nurse state? The nurse stated he was affected in the stomach and with some trouble in the legs, just as he is affected now, and he is unable to do one minute's work, having had his health destroyed in the service of the United States.

Mr. DUNWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if I may.

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. DUNWELL. Are those sworn statements?

Mr. FLOOD. They are sworn statements.

Mr. DUNWELL. The gentleman did not read the jurat.

Mr. FLOOD. I omitted that to save time.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the claimant he speaks of is now drawing a pension?

Mr. FLOOD. Not drawing one cent.

Mr. SCOTT. If the facts are as the gentleman has stated and as the evidence he has produced would tend to show, why can he not draw a pension under the general law?

Mr. FLOOD. I can not tell you. You will have to ask the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MACON. Where is the report of the Pension Bureau showing why they did not grant him a pension there? Will the gentleman present that to the House?

Mr. FLOOD. I can not, because I have not got it.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it in the Pension Committee room?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know.

Mr. MACON. Give me the name, and I will go and see. I am on that committee, and if it is doing dirt I want to know it.

Mr. FLOOD. Here are two cases before this House, one of them favorably reported and one I can not get a report on, when the one that is not reported has ten times as strong evidence as the other. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to oppose the Lunger bill, because I do not know all the merits of it, but I do know the case I represent here is meritorious, if there ever was a meritorious case reported from that committee and passed by this House. I do not know why discrimination is made against my constituent and not against the constituents of the other gentlemen here. I have done all I could to get this bill reported. I have been to the chairman of this committee time and again; but it has been laid on the table, and it, the committee, has a rule that when a bill is laid on the table it takes ten members to take it from the table. I will add here that since it was laid on the table I have gotten additional proof that made the case stronger than it was before, but since I got that additional proof there have never been ten members present at any meeting, and now I can not find out from the chairman of the committee whether he will call another meeting of that committee or not before this session adjourns. He seems to think it is a small matter because only one man, probably, is concerned in it. But it is not a small matter to me, because I know injustice is being done my constituent, and I know a pension he is entitled to at the hands of this Congress is being withheld from him.

I want to read just one or two affidavits as to the condition of this man. Here is the affidavit of Hon. John W. Churchman, member of the Virginia legislature from the county in which he lives and who lives near him:

STATE OF VIRGINIA,
County of Augusta, to wit:

Signed and sworn to by J. W. Churchman before me, the undersigned notary public for the State of Virginia and county of Augusta, that I, J. W. Churchman, am a resident of the county of Augusta, in the State of Virginia, and a representative from this county to the Virginia legislature. I have known Hansford G. Gilkeson all of his life, and that prior to his enlistment in the Spanish-American war as a member of Company K, Second Virginia Regiment, Virginia Volunteers; that he, the said Hansford G. Gilkeson, was physically, in my opinion, a perfect man and in good health; that I saw him upon his return from the Army and know of my own knowledge that his health was shattered and his physical condition bad, and that his physical disabilities have been constantly and steadily growing until at the present time he is a hopeless cripple.

J. W. CHURCHMAN.

Given under my hand and notarial seal this 8th day of May, 1906.

HARRY BURNETT, Notary Public.

Now, there are other affidavits of a similar character. I could pile them up here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman what the condition of this soldier was when he entered the Army.

Mr. FLOOD. There is the affidavit of a near neighbor, Mr. Chairman, an honored member of the Virginia legislature, who says he was in perfect condition when he entered the Army, and——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was he not examined before he entered the service?

Mr. FLOOD. I just read the affidavit of the second lieutenant of his company, who said he was examined and accepted as a man in perfect physical condition at that time, and he knows that when he came out of that service his health was wrecked. And this case was kept in that committee, and it seems impossible to get it out of it. I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] how he differentiates this case from the Lunger case? I assert again that the proof, on every essential point, of the facts laid down as necessary to bring a case out of his committee is ten times as strong in the Gilkeson case as it is in the Lunger case.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to say that the chairman does not differentiate. The committee acts on all these bills.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The bill to which the gentleman refers was considered in subcommittee by a Member of Congress who occupies a seat on that side of the Chamber, and he went thoroughly through the papers then presented, as did the full committee. My recollection of the case is this: That the soldier applied for and was given a discharge from the service that he might go home to attend to his business affairs, which were pressing. The affidavits that were presented at the time of the consideration of the bill did not satisfy the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FLOOD. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. Did you see the application signed by Gilkeson asking a discharge on the ground you have stated? I never did.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do not know anything about that. I am stating my recollection.

Mr. FLOOD. Suppose it did, and it turned out that he asked his discharge from the service that he might go home to attend to his private business, and it afterwards transpires that his health was wrecked by disease that he contracted in the service, and this was the real cause of his request for a discharge, would the original application justify you in refusing to give him a pension?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I do not think it would. I think the proof before the committee did not satisfy them that the disease was continuous from the time he left the service up to the present time. What affidavits the gentleman may have received since that bill was considered and acted upon I do not know. The gentleman must recognize as fatal the fact that they did not cover the point, and whether those he has will cover it I do not know. He speaks of whether the committee is likely to be brought together. I can only say that the members of the committee can be if they so desire, but, as every Member of this House knows, it is difficult, indeed, at this time of the year and at this time of the session to obtain the presence of a majority of the committee, and at the last meeting it was impossible to get just half the members there. So no bill can be reported where there was a single member that objected, and it is impossible for the committee to reconsider its action on the bill to which the gentleman refers. So far as the action of the committee is concerned and its membership, I am perfectly willing to leave its record to the membership of this House and past Congresses, perfectly content that they will exonerate the committee from any degree of favoritism whatsoever, no matter who the Member who introduced the bill may be, what his political faith, and what section he comes from. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, that is all aside from the question I have raised. I have said nothing about the committee discriminating against Members because they came from one State or another. The gentleman can not hide the miserable weakness of the action of the committee behind that subterfuge. I have said nothing about discriminating on account of a Member's party faith. I have presented the facts in this case, and submit to the candid, honest judgment of every Member of this House whether I have not presented a bill that is entitled to the consideration of the committee, entitled to a favorable report, and entitled to be passed by this House.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the gentleman state that these affidavits which he read to the House were before the committee and considered by them before action was taken on the bill?

Mr. FLOOD. I will state that this affidavit was before the committee. It is the affidavit of Captain Kerr, captain of this man's company, and he said this:

I was captain of Company K, Second Regiment Virginia Volunteers, in which company Hansford G. Gilkeson was a private, and know of my own knowledge that said Gilkeson was a stout, able-bodied, and apparently perfectly healthy man when he entered the service; that while on duty in Florida he was taken sick, was sick for some time, and never recovered, but has continuously since been apparently afflicted with some species of paralysis or something like either locomotor ataxia or transverse myletis, which seriously impairs his locomotion and has apparently impaired his general health.

That affidvit shows that the trouble was incurred while he was in the service of his country, and that he is suffering from the same trouble now. That affidavit was before the committee when this bill was laid upon the table. In addition, since this, the case has been strengthened by affidavits of other gentlemen. But since this action has been taken on this bill, there have not been ten members of the committee present; and the thing I complain of is not that ten members have not been present, because I realize the fact as well as anybody that during the month of May and the latter part of April many Members are attending to their political fences at home, and are not in the city to attend committee meetings.

But what I complain of is that I have been unable to ascertain from the chairman of this committee whether he will have another meeting of this committee between now and the adjournment of Congress or not, absolutely leaving my constituent without any opportunity to have these additional affidavits presented. As the chairman of the committee said to me, he will have an opportunity when another session convenes. Of course he will, but by that time the poor fellow may have suffered so much that he will not need any help from this House or this Government.

Now, I do not know that there is anything I can do here. I simply want to put myself upon record, and let those who are concerned in this matter know that I have done everything I could before the committee, in my interviews with the chairman of that committee, and in the House to get this just and meritorious claim considered and enacted into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SUSAN R. FREEMAN.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 18398) granting an increase of pension to Susan R. Freeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan R. Freeman, widow of Thomas Freeman, late of Conner's battalion, Texas Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after "Texas," insert "Mounted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOEL GAY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 18409) granting an increase of pension to Joel Gay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joel Gay, late of Captain Johnson's independent company, Florida Regiment Mounted Volunteers, Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 change "Johnson's" to "Johnston's."
In line 7 strike out "Regiment;" and in the same line, after "Volunteers," insert "Florida."
In line 8 strike out "twelve" and insert "sixteen."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HUGH REID.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 18523) granting an increase of pension to Hugh Reid.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hugh Reid, late hospital steward, First United States Engineers, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after "First," insert "Regiment;" and in the same line, after "United States," insert "Volunteer."
In line 8 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "ten."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments will be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I object. I think the Chair had better put the question each time on a motion; it would keep the Chair from keeping on the qui vive all the time to see if I were looking.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that it is the desire of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Chair wait until some Member makes a motion?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is not necessary under the rule; that the committee amendments are considered pending by virtue of the report of the committee, and hence it is unnecessary to wait for a motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand they are considered pending, but it does not give the Chair the right to pass them by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has in no case failed to get the opinion of the House. The Chair has said "without objection" each time, and there has been no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the point I desire is that the Chair shall put the motion to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman objects, the Chair has invariably put the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it would save time if the Chair would do that in each case and save the necessity of my objection.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA REBECCA SIMS.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 18694) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Rebecca Sims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Levi M. Hall, late of Company A, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommend by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM A. CARROLL.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14544) granting an increase of pension to William A. Carroll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William A. Carroll, late of Company K, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommend by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LUCINDA BRADY.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14798) granting a pension to Lucinda Brady.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Brady, widow of Simon D. Brady, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

In same line, after the word "month," insert the words "and $2 per month additional on account of each minor child of said soldier until each of such children shall arrive at the age of 16 years."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID H. MOFFAT.

The next pension business was the bill (S. 584) for the relief of David H. Moffat.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That David H. Moffat shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a captain of the Third Regiment of Colorado Cavalry Volunteers on the 20th day of August, 1864, and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to him a certificate of discharge as a captain of said regiment, to date from the 17th day of September, 1864: Provided, That no pay or other emoluments shall become due or payable to any person by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY WHISLER.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 14930) granting a pension to Mary Whistler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Whistler, daughter of G. W. Whistler, Company F, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Mary," strike out the word "Whistler" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Whisler."

In same line, before the word "daughter," insert the words "helpless and dependent."

In same line strike out the initial "G." and insert in lieu thereof the word "George."

In same line, after the initial "W.," strike out the word "Whistler" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Whisler, late of."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it is now forty-one years since the close of the war of the sixties. Every alternate Friday is devoted by Congress to the consideration and passage of special pension bills for the relief of veterans of that war, their wives, and those dependent upon them. This is proper and right, as far as it goes. The objection I have to this way of attempting to reach the deserving cases and the unfortunate conditions that we are attempting to reach by passing special bills is the fact that we only reach one now and then of the very many of those who are justly entitled to the recognition that we here give by special bills to a few.

I have introduced at this and other sessions of Congress and now have pending bills of a general character covering the exact conditions that we are here endeavoring to relieve by private bills. It is impossible for Congress to reach all the deserving and unfortunate veterans of the war of the sixties by special legislation. It is well enough for those whom we are able to reach, but most unfortunate for those whose claims can not be reached. Congress and its committees are unable to give special attention to the vast number of bills for the relief of veterans whose conditions are upon all fours with the conditions of those in whose favor bills are reported and passed every two weeks.

Congress is doing business for a country that is to-day pre-eminent in the fact that it is first among the nations of the world—first in wealth, first in power, first in influence, first in commerce, first in everything that makes a nation great. And I do not indulge in idle comment when I say that the glory, the achievements, and the country of which we are so justly proud to-day are all largely due to the services of the men who in the sixties offered the best they had on the altar of their country. They preserved the Union and made possible what we enjoy to-day.

I think, therefore, that as Congress exerts its every energy to reach these deserving veterans by special bills, we ought to adopt the better policy and take one day off and pass general laws reaching all the deserving cases and then abolish private pension legislation. I have a bill here of a few lines that I have been urging ever since I have been here that ought to pass Congress, that would go far toward doing the justice we owe the veterans.

It provides a service pension of $12 per month for every man who served for ninety days or more and received an honorable discharge. It increases the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, to $18 per month. It provides a pension of $30 per month to all those who are helpless, rendered so by blindness, paralysis, by rheumatism, or by whatever cause that renders them incapable of caring for themselves, whether of service origin or not.

I have another bill that I have been urging for three years, giving $12 per month to every soldier or sailor who served sixty days in a rebel prison, and $1 additional for every additional thirty days or major fraction of thirty days, in lieu of all other pensions up to $30 per month.

Mr. Chairman, if these bills should become laws, we would only be doing in one day what we are attempting to do here from day to day in this Congress by passing special bills in behalf of specially deserving men, showing, whether we will or no, however, favoritism in behalf of the men in whose interests we pass the bills, and correspondingly doing injustice to the men whose bills we are unable to reach, and who are in every way as deserving as those we favor.

Mr. Chairman, it is unjust to the patriotism of the American people to talk about the mere matter of the cost to the Government of doing what I am here advocating and what is provided for in these bills. A Government that spends millions of dollars for the purpose of developing the commerce of our common country by digging a canal to increase our business with the nations of the earth, and spends many more millions for the maintenance of the Army and Navy in a time of profound peace, ought not to stop to figure the amount of money it would take to properly care for the volunteer veterans of the most important war of our history. These veterans have a just claim upon the Government, and it ought to be met now. Our first duty is to pay our debt to them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask my friend why is it that there are so many special pension acts? It looks to me as though the number of special acts is increasing. What is the matter with the Pension Bureau that it does not prevent this trouble? No one wants to deny any just pension, and it takes up a lot of the time of Congress to pass these special acts. Can you explain why this condition exists?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Pension Bureau is unable to reach these cases for the reason that the condition of the soldier does not come within the provisions of any of our general laws.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A great many of them are for increases.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; a great many of these cases are for increases over the amount soldiers are now drawing under the general law, or under the act of 1890; in fact, most all are increases.

The veterans ask for an increase, and in many cases the only way they can get it is by a special bill, as the general laws now stand.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think perhaps I have suggested this before, that we should establish a pension court. We have a Court of Claims to pass on war and civil claims. It seems to me that if we had a court of five or six judges to pass upon the facts in these pension claims, as the Court of Claims does in the cases which come before it, we should have very little to do here except to appropriate the necessary money to pay the claim as adjudged by this court.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Pension Bureau now serves the exact purpose that would be served by a pension court. The only difficulty is that under the provisions of the general law the applicant must have incurred his disabilities in the war, and those disabilities must have been continuous to the present time in order to entitle him to a pension of more than $12 a month, which amount is allowed under the act of 1890, without regard to the origin of injury or disability.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman agrees with me that if this court was created we should have very little to do except to pay the debts, because that is practically what a pension is—a moral obligation at least. I think it would relieve the Pension Bureau of a great deal of work, and it would relieve this House of a great deal of work that we are called upon to do here at times when we might well be doing something else. What we are doing here to-day is merely perfunctory. The gentleman will agree to that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is just the reason I am addressing myself to the House at this time upon this question. I want a general law that will reach the case of every deserving veteran to the full extent that we reach a few by passing special bills.

The House gladly does what it is able to do by setting aside each alternate Friday for special pensions. My objection is that on these days we are not able to pass special bills enough to reach the number of cases that are entitled to consideration at the hands of Congress, and the only way we can reach all the deserving and needy cases is by a general law that will take care of all alike.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will indulge me, what per cent of these claims are new pensions entirely?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I should say a very small percentage of them, if, indeed, any of them.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it not a fact that none that come before the Committee on Invalid Pensions are considered unless the applicant is already drawing $12?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is absolutely correct. An applicant must have availed himself of the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, and be drawing $12 a month or he can not get a special bill through Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose he is not drawing any pension?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then there is no way of securing a pension by special bill under the rules of the Invalid Pensions Committee. The veteran must first avail himself of the provisions of the general law or the act of 1890 in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the rule the gentleman speaks of is a Senate rule, and not a House rule.

Mr. DAWSON. Have not the committees identical rules?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think they work under the same rules.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is a mistake. The House Committee on Invalid Pensions for the last twelve years have had no rules printed. We do what we think is equitable in each case.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It has been my understanding and experience that the House committee conformed to the Senate rules. If I am mistaken in that, I am glad to be corrected. I do know that I have not been able to get a special bill considered until the applicant had exhausted his remedies in the Pension Bureau under the general law or the act of 1890. It has always been required that the applicant draw at least $12 per month—the maximum under the law of 1890.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is aside. What I am here urging upon Congress is that we should make complete provision for all similar conditions under a general law, and this we are unable to do by special bills. Mr. Chairman, I have a hundred and twenty-five applications for increase of pensions by special bills. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has been kind to me, and I have been able to secure the passage of six at this session of Congress. I still have 119 applicants in every way as deserving as those for whom the bills have passed. I find no fault with the committee or the Congress for not passing more special bills, for I know that all have been passed that could be considered and reported by the committee. My contention is, I repeat again, that a general service-pension law should be passed for at least $12 per month. The act of 1890 should be amended so as to provide $18 instead of $12 as the maximum under the law, and widows pensions increased to $12 from $8 under the same law, then all who are specially unfortunate and unable to care for themselves whether due to service origin or not should have $30 per month, as provided for by my bill.

An act such as I am here advocating by the passage of a bill in behalf of ex-prisoners of war ought to be given favorable consideration. None who stood for our cause when we needed patriotic men are more worthy than those who spurned offers of freedom if they would cease to fight for the Union. [Applause.]

We give sanction to the justice of the claims I make here every pension day by passing bills for a few of those for whom I now speak. Let us do full justice to all by passing laws that will reach every case and treat all alike. [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, upon the subject suggested by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] I wish to make a few remarks. Some time ago I introduced a bill, which I will read. It is H. R. 10128:

A bill to authorize the granting of pensions and the increase of pensions in extraordinary cases not now provided for.

Be it enacted, etc., That pensions may be granted within the limit of the dependent pension law approved June 27, 1890, to soldiers and sailors who have served or shall serve in the Army or Navy of the United States, their widows and orphans, in cases not now provided for by law, if found to be of real merit and within the spirit of equitable pension legislation, and if the applicant be destitute; and pensions heretofore or hereafter granted under any general law may be increased beyond the limit of the law applicable, in extraordinary cases equitably warranting an exceptional allowance on account of exceptional merit or exceptional necessity; and hereafter all bills presented or pending in Congress to grant or to increase any pension by special act shall be certified to the Bureau of Pensions to be disposed of agreeably to the provisions of this act; and the Secretary of the Interior shall make suitable rules and regulations for the adjudication of cases herein provided for.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that it is practically impossible for any committee of Congress, no matter how hard it works, to consider all the cases of this character that are presented, and it is equally impossible for it to determine properly all of the cases that it may be called upon to consider.

Now, one practical and necessary effect is that in any committee, at any time, made up in any way, while some very meritorious cases are passed upon and disposed of, others equally and even more meritorious do not and can not receive consideration. It seems to me that if some provision were made, such as I have suggested, if there could be a tribunal properly organized in the Pension Bureau to consider these pension cases, cases outside of the general line of existing legislation, there would be a systematic treatment of them; that a particular class of cases regarded as meritorious would receive favorable consideration there, and every applicant would have the same prospect as every other applicant having equal merit in cases of the same general character.

As I said before, such treatment through special acts in Congress is necessarily impossible. The committee that deals with these questions in this Congress has been a very busy and very hard-worked committee, and so far as I know, and so far as I have any reason to believe, they have considered cases fairly and disposed of them according to their best judgment, according to merit as they saw merit in the cases. But in the very nature of things, from the multitude of these bills, from the great amount of time necessary in considering them, from the fact that a very large proportion of the special pension bills introduced can not possibly be considered, that the larger portion must remain unacted upon in committee, it seems to me that some general legislation like that proposed in the bill read by me might be wholesome, just, and beneficial to those who have claims, and not unfair to the people at large. There would in that way be system about it; there would be the same treatment accorded to all applicants, provided the board be made up properly. And then what a saving of the time of the Congress.

I do not care to take the time of the committee. The remarks I have made were suggested by those of the gentleman from Kansas. I merely wished to submit these observations, and I have nothing further to say, except that I do hope something will be done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, several times I have suggested that I thought a fairly good way to get rid of special legislation that we have here to-day and deal justly with as many people as ought to be pensioned, would be to establish a court of pensions with five or six judges, to sit here in Washington, giving them all the necessary machinery, empowering them to find the facts as does the Court of Claims and let their judgment—this court's judgment—be certified to Congress, and then Congress would have very little to do except to pay them off, just as we do the claims passed upon by the Court of Claims. When the Court of Claims passes upon a claim, finding the facts, say, for $1,000, such a finding is practically an order on Congress to pay that $1,000.

I think I heard the late lamented Nelson Dingley say this court's judgment in such cases was treated by Congress as an order on Congress to pay it. Now, here are a great many people who ought to be pensioned. We hear as much on both sides of the Chamber. No one will dispute that; they should have their day in court. Many do not and can not, it seems, under our present system. Gentlemen, these are the widows and orphans of the heroes of our wars. Like the old Mexican soldier from whom I read a letter to-day, a personal friend of mine, a blacksmith in my old neighborhood. The old man is totally dependent and about 80 years of age. He is needy; a good man of the old school. It is a shame; it is a reflection upon Congress; it is a reflection upon the people of the Government that such cases exist. Now, if we had a pension court, he could get some one to draw a petition, take his depositions or affidavits, have his papers sent to the court of pensions here at Washington, have his day in court, and get relief in due and sure course, if he should have it at all. Let this court hold its sessions all the year round, as other courts, whether Congress is in session or not.

It seems to me like that is one of the ways to help the committee that I am satisfied is very much burdened with this work. I know that I have been to members of this Pension Committee to get them to attend to legislation of another kind that I wanted passed. They throw up their hands and say, "Why, I am so busy on these pension matters that I don't get a chance to attend to my own business." It seems to me like a very easy proposition for us to create a court and call that court the "court of pensions," to sit and pass on the facts and then to certify the facts here to us. Then Congress would pay them, just like we do any other claim in an omnibus bill, legislating in that bill to suit each set of facts or case.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make any speech, but I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions or somebody on that committee the reason they do not report the Senate bill here increasing the pensions of the Mexican veterans.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to have that answered myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there anybody here on that committee?

Mr. MACON. I will answer the gentleman's question to the best of my knowledge, and that is to the effect that I have been unable to get the subcommittee, of which the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is chairman, to even report the bill that the gentleman speaks of for those grand old patriots back to the whole committee so that I can move to get it out.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why doesn't somebody move to discharge the committee from the consideration of it?

Mr. MACON. I can not get anybody to help me. The chairman objects to that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who is the chairman of the committee in charge of that bill?

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER].

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of James H. Davis, a soldier in Company B, East Tennessee National Guards, war of the rebellion, so as to show that the said James H. Davis enlisted and was mustered into said company on September 1, 1863; and this act shall entitle the said James H. Davis to all the rights, privileges, and benefits withheld by reason of the record herein having been incorrect.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That James H. Davis, of Company B, East Tennessee National Guard, war of the rebellion, be held and considered to have been enlisted in said organization September 14, 1863."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills and amendments to the House with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills—some with and some without amendments—do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CRUMPACKER) having taken the chair, Mr. CAPRON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that the committee had had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar and directed him to report the same—some with and some without amendments—with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass, and also that one bill do lie upon the table.

HOUSE BILLS WITH AMENDMENTS.

In the following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, the amendments were agreed to; and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed:

JAMES T. SAUNDERSON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5554) granting an increase of pension to James T. Saunderson.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 1.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair finds that there is not a quorum present. The doors will be closed, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in the absentees, the question will be taken upon the passage of the pending bill, the Clerk will call the roll, and all those in favor of the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, say "aye," and those opposed "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Chair announce a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the motion we are voting on now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a call of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not require a vote, does it, for a call of the House? The rules require a call of the House on the development of no quorum.

Mr. KEIFER. The rules allow the Chair to order a yea-and-nay vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has directed the call of the House on the passage of the bill to determine whether a quorum be present and the bill shall be passed.

Mr. SIMS. Can we have the bill read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent. The Chair will state that it is a pension bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I really would like to know what I am to vote for. I have not heard the bill read.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is not giving attention.

Mr. OLMSTED. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to report the bill without unanimous consent.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 12, answering "present" 17, not voting 187, as follows:

Mr. HIGGINS with Mr. WEBB.
Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. HEFLIN.
On this vote:
Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. DALZELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALZELL. I was not here when the roll call started. Is this a Democratic filibuster against granting a pension to a Union soldier?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and I voted for the bill. And that is not all—I had to withdraw my vote, finding I was still paired and in honor bound to do so—and I will vote so again under the same circumstances.

Mr. BARTLETT. I voted for the bill, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. I am asking if it is a Democratic filibuster against a pension bill?

Mr. RUCKER. The Democrats voted for the bill, with few exceptions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a roll call. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, are you sincere in saying that it seems to you to be a case of a Democratic filibuster against a pension bill?

Mr. DALZELL. It looks like it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to ask.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. Is it a fact that we can not keep Republicans here in order to vote on pension bills, but have to send out and have them arrested and bring them in to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly regards that as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask if it is not a fact that they had to send for the gentleman from Pennsylvania and bring him in to vote for the passage of this bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no; "the gentleman from Pennsylvania" was in the corridor.

Mr. MACON. But not in the House.

Mr. DALZELL. He is generally here.

Mr. MACON. He was not in the Hall of the House.

Mr. GARNER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This matter is not open to debate.

Mr. MACON. We vote in the House. We do not vote in the corridors, but vote in here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker of the House [Mr. CANNON] did not vote on this roll call to make a quorum, called for by the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to ask if it would be in order for me to make a speech now. It is about twenty minutes long, and I have been waiting four days for an opportunity to deliver it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would hardly be in order.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought it would save time, while the House is waiting for a quorum. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to address the House for twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request of the gentleman is hardly in order pending a call of the House.

A quorum having appeared, the Speaker resumed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 165, the nays 12, answered "present" 16. A quorum is present, and the bill is passed. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. We have now a quorum, and the House is now passing pension bills in the presence of and by a quorum for the first time in years, a thing we ought to do all the time, out of respect to the heroes who are getting these pensions and our oaths to support the Constitution. [Applause.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 26, 1906.

[Continuation of legislative day of Friday, May 25, 1906.]

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by its Clerk, Hon. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, who announced that the Speaker had delegated as Speaker pro tempore Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania.

Thereupon Mr. DALZELL took the chair.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 19264, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and a division was demanded by Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently no quorum is present, and the doors will be closed——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, no one has raised the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was anticipating the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the Chair need to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Very well; the Chair will put the question.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 69, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the country having become aroused to the humiliating fact that in recent years corporations, trusts, insurance companies, and all those interests enjoying special privileges have contributed enormous sums of money to campaign committees, which have been used to degrade, corrupt, and debauch the voter and, perhaps, control results of elections, a movement has been formally inaugurated to secure such legislation by the several States and by Congress as, it is hoped and believed, will at least check, if not effectually put a stop to, large campaign contributions, and thus restore the purity and integrity of our elections.

The particular movement in behalf of pure elections to which I refer was started by a distinguished citizen of New York, the Hon. Perry Belmont. The ultimate success of his most worthy and commendable effort is assured by the almost unanimous public approval it has received. The hearty and cordial cooperation of representative citizens of the different political parties residing in every section of the United States has been freely tendered. A nonpartisan association or organization, under the name of National Publicity Bill Organization, of which Mr. Belmont is president, is the result. The membership of this organization embraces candidates for the Presidency, United States Senators and ex-Senators, Representatives in Congress and ex-Members, governors and ex-governors, presidents of universities and colleges, presidents of the great labor organizations, members of the Democratic and Republican national and State committees, editors of great newspapers, judges of courts, and gentlemen prominent in every profession and avocation.

It affords me great pleasure to pause in this connection to say that, in my judgment, Mr. Belmont justly merits the plaudits of every lover of civic honor and of every advocate of public morals for perfecting an organization whose membership individually, as well as collectively, is so powerful, potential, and influential as to warrant the gratifying conviction that the demand for purity of elections must and will triumph.

In the early days of this Congress a bill requiring publicity of campaign contributions and expenditures was introduced by a prominent member of the National Publicity Bill Organization, who is also a distinguished and useful Member of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL]. This bill was referred to the House Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, of which I have the honor to be a member. Our committee was not very diligent in the performance of its duty until stimulated to action by caustic and well-deserved criticism administered on this floor. Finally we entered upon consideration of the so-called "McCall bill." As I remember, the committee was practically a unit in recognizing the merits of the principle involved in this bill and the necessity for legislation along this line, and we regarded the McCall bill a long step in the right direction. Personally I do not think the McCall bill goes far enough. It only seeks publicity of the actions of national committees, and that only after elections. I desired to include other committees, so as to prevent evasion of law by a mere change of the base of operation. I also wanted publicity, as far as practicable, before elections—before the fruits of corruption and of the corrupt use of money shall have been enjoyed. With these thoughts in view, I took the McCall bill as a basis, using much of it without change, and drafted H. R. 19078, which I introduced on May 8. As I may not have the opportunity later, I desire now to give the House a brief synopsis of the essential features of the bill introduced by myself.

The first section requires all campaign contributions to be made only to a political committee or to some person authorized by such committee.

The second section defines the term "political committee" to mean any national committee, any national Congressional campaign committee, any State committee, and any district Congressional committee, of any political party, which shall aid or promote the success or defeat of any candidate for Congress, or which shall receive and expend money at or in connection with any election at which candidates for Representative in Congress are voted for.

Sections 4 and 6 require each political committee to have a chairman and a treasurer, and make it the duty of the treasurer to keep an exact record of all moneys received and expended, showing the true name and address of each person, committee, association, or corporation from whom funds are received or to whom money is paid or distributed, with the date and amount of each transaction.

Section 7 prohibits political committees from receiving contributions, from any source, within thirty days next preceding the November general election, and in States where the general election for Members of Congress is fixed by law at a time other than November the political committees within such States are prohibited from receiving contributions within thirty days next before the election in such States.

Section 8 requires each political committee whose aggregate receipts shall exceed $1,000 to make publicity as follows: The national committees of each political party, within thirty and not less than twenty days next preceding the November general election, and the State and district committees of each political party within thirty days and not less than twenty days next preceding the date fixed by law in their respective States for the general election at which Members of Congress are to be elected, are severally required to make and publish in a newspaper of general circulation, published in the town or city where the treasurer shall keep his office, a full, true, and complete statement, signed and sworn to by the chairman and treasurer, showing the date and amount of each and every contribution, the true name and address of each contributor, and the date and amount of each and every expenditure or distribution, giving the true name and address of the person or committee to whom paid or distributed. And, in addition to the newspaper publication before the election, each of said committees is required to make a similar statement after the election, including and embracing the ante-election publication, showing in detail the entire transactions of such committees, which must be signed and sworn to by the chairman and treasurer and filed with the Clerk of this House within thirty days after the election, to be preserved by him for at least fifteen months, and be open to inspection by any citizen of the United States.

Other sections relate to judicial procedure and prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I freely concede that the bill I am discussing may be, and doubtless is, imperfect. I am not attached to a phrase in it and will gladly abandon it for a better measure. I believe it is the best that has thus far been presented for consideration, and therefore I stand for it. It is not symmetrical enough for some of my colleagues on the committee; it is too crude for some, does not go far enough to satisfy some, and goes too far for others.

I am the poorest of literary artists. If this bill presents in clear, distinct, and comprehensive language the great principle of publicity, then it satisfies me. I confess I have made no effort to construct a thing of beauty, but on the contrary I derive some pleasure from the hope that it will appear so hideous and monstrous to every corruptionist who would degrade and debauch our elections that the mere contemplation of its enactment and enforcement would result in a case of acute nervous prostration, with strong symptoms of complete physical collapse. [Applause.]

Believing that H. R. 19078 would give practical and substantial publicity and therefore merit public approval, I sought earnestly to secure its favorable report. When the committee agreed to take a final vote on this bill at noon on May 12, I confess I was elated. At the time fixed Mr. WATKINS, one of the minority members, moved "that following the special order heretofore made, the hour of 12 o'clock meridian having arrived, the committee report favorably H. R. 19078 as amended."

The roll was called, and those voting in favor of reporting the bill H. R. 19078 were Messrs. RUCKER, GILLESPIE, HARDWICK, ELLERBE, and WATKINS—5.

Those voting in the negative were Messrs. GAINES of West Virginia, SULLOWAY, HERMANN, NORRIS, BROOKS of Colorado, DUNWELL, CAMPBELL of Ohio, and BURKE of Pennsylvania—8.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman hardly intends or desires, when he comes to think of it, to mention occurrences in the committee and the names of those who voted for or against the proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RUCKER. I will yield to my friend from Missouri, but I want to say I think I am capable of taking care of myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the rule read.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr, Chairman, I do not need any instruction this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, before the ruling is made the gentleman from Missouri ought to have an opportunity to express himself.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri desires to explain——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] if he made this objection simply for the "good of the order" or has he been requested to do it?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I have not been requested to do it. I do not know who voted either way in the committee, but several times recently—I am not referring to the gentleman from Missouri—statements have been made showing what occurred in the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in the first place that I understand a record is kept by the committee for some purpose. No record is kept, so far as I am concerned, for the purpose of concealing my action.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order, and will take his seat.

Mr. RUCKER. Very well, but I will get up again.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. First the Chair will have the rule read.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, is it possible that the gentleman from Missouri is not to be permitted to argue the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows.

It is not in order in the House to refer to the proceedings of a committee, or to read from the records thereof, except by authority of the committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the statement already made giving the votes of the members of the committee and criticising the action of gentlemen ought not to be permitted to go in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has the right to argue the point of order as well as has the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule it is within the discretion of the Chair as to whom he shall hear on the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But there was nobody else trying to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I am not ready for the Chairman to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear nothing further upon this point. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the gentleman from Missouri be permitted to proceed in order.

The question was taken; and the motion that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to proceed in order was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Chair direct that the rule be again read for my benefit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again read the rule in the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read the rule.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: What is the meaning of those words "authority from the committee?"

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri desires, the Clerk will read the whole precedent.

Mr. RUCKER. Not in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. No; not in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

713. It is not in order in the House to refer to the proceedings of a committee, or to read from the records thereof, except by authority of the committee. On February 19, 1840, the House was considering the report of the Committee on Elections in the New Jersey contested cases, when Mr. David Petrikin, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following as a question of order:

"That neither the chairman of a committee, nor any other member of the committee or of the House, can be permitted to allude on the floor to anything which has taken place in committee, or in any way relate in debate what was done by said committee or by the individual members of that committee, except it is done by a written report made to the House by authority of a majority of the committee.

The Chair decided generally that the point of order was well taken.

The debate proceeding, Mr. Millard Fillmore, of New York, made allusions to the proceedings in the Committee on Elections, and, while reading a resolution which had been adopted in that committee, was called to order by the Speaker on the ground that a Member had no right to read papers containing the proceedings of the committee (not reported by the committee), although the amendment under consideration proposed to print their proceedings.

Mr. Fillmore then took his seat.

Mr. John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, appealed from the decision of the Chair in its calling of Mr. Fillmore to order, on the ground that the proposition of the Committee on Elections to authorize that committee to have papers printed necessarily brought all such papers before the House. Furthermore, any Member of the House had the right to call for the reading of papers which it was proposed to print. The rules were already too rigid for the rights of Members.

Mr. Petrikin maintained that a committee was a distinct body of individuals and that it was entirely out of order to read papers and arraign its proceedings before the House. Mr. John Pope, of Kentucky, thought they should not discuss any papers and proceedings of a committee until they were reported to the House. Mr. Linn Banks, of Virginia, spoke of the importance of the precedent. He favored preserving the rights of the minority, but this case involved rather the integrity of committee proceedings. If it was allowable to go into committee and drag forth their records to be commented on in the House jealousy would be endangered and the usefulness of committees impaired. The consequences of reversing the settled practice of the House should be looked to rather than the particular case before them.

The decision of the Chair was sustained by a vote of 98 yeas to 84 nays.

The CHAIRMAN. This decision was made by Mr. Speaker Howell Cobb, of Georgia. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized in his own right and will now proceed in order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that extensive reading does not come out of my time. Does it?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, though I am hardly able to comprehend all the rules of the House, I will assume, for the moment, that every rule is adopted for some wise purpose. Now, with reference to the point of order made, I want to address myself to that for a moment. I take it that if the committee permits me to use the record made by that committee that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] will not object to it. Before I took this floor, I want to say to the Chair and to this House that I asked the gentlemen of that committee for permission to use these records, and I say that the gentlemen of that committee said the use to be made of the records was a question for each individual to determine for himself, and I have determined it for myself, and whatever may be the ruling of the Chair I am willing to let the country pass upon the question. I want to state here what occurred in preventing legislation and to show why a publicity bill has not been reported. Mr. Chairman, every day we hear gentlemen on this floor say that such and such a bill has a unanimous report of the committee. Does not that carry with it a suggestion that the committee all favored it? All that I want to do is to show that the reason we have not come in here with a bill on this great question, which is agitating and engaging the thoughts of men throughout this whole United States, is because our committee is not unanimous * * * . [Words stricken out by direction of Chairman.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, can I withdraw the language?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. RUCKER. Can not I withdraw the language?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to withdraw the language, and if he does not withdraw it, it will be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. RUCKER. Then I shall let the Chair strike it out. Its suppression will serve my purpose nearly as well as its insertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Reporter is directed to strike the remarks of the gentleman which are out of order from the RECORD.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has no control over the RECORD; that it is the Speaker who has the right to do that, and not the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and that the Chair usurps power when he does it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has jurisdiction over matters spoken in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I submit the Speaker has control and not the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and I make the point of order that the Chair has no power over it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] will permit——

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, all of us are out of order, I admit.

The CHAIRMAN. All gentlemen will take their seats. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized to proceed in order and has fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will try to proceed in order and yield as respectfully and submissively as I can to the ruling of the Chair, induced, as it is, by the distinguished leader of the majority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not tell this House what is in the record, since gentlemen on the other side desire that the record shall not have publicity. I shall not quote the record any more, but, proceeding, as I trust I may now proceed, in order, I desire to say that if the bill H. R. 19078 were up for consideration before this committee and a vote should be taken on a motion to report that bill back to the House of Representatives, then, on such a motion as that, I say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE], and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] would vote in the affirmative, and on such a motion as that in this House—now, mark you, not in the House committee—the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MORRIS], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROOKS], the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUNWELL], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] would all vote in the negative. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] And if they did not do it, they would contradict themselves.

Mr. GRIGGS. Are they Republicans or Democrats?

Mr. RUCKER. All that I named last are Republicans, of course. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to mention anything that occurred in the committee, but the next meeting of the committee—and I believe I can state that, because it is a historical fact that we had a meeting on the 19th day of May—the chairman of the committee—mark you, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to say what occurred in the committee—the chairman of that committee, my distinguished friend from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], submitted a bill that he had prepared at the suggestion and the request of the committee for the consideration of that committee, and I want to say that if the bill, reported by the distinguished chairman of that committee, instead of being reported to the committee had been reported to this Committee of the Whole House, and I had made the motion like this, "that the committee proceed now to the consideration of the draft of the bill just submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, and that the Committee of the Whole hold daily sessions, only taking recess for meals, from 10.30 a. m. until 5 p. m. of each day, until a final vote on the bill be had, and that question were submitted on this floor to a vote, on the roll call I want to say to the House and to the country that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ELLERBE], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], would vote in the affirmative, and every gentleman on the majority side of that committee except one would vote in the negative, or else they would again contradict themselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding in order, I hope. [Laughter.] Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest another fact. If this Committee of the Whole had under consideration publicity measures, and if this committee had agreed solemnly to meet three times a week for the purpose of giving consideration to this great and important subject, I believe that at a meeting like this on a pleasant forenoon, that perhaps the gentleman—Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania—would move that hereafter instead of meeting three times a week that we only meet once a week. If he had so moved—in this committee, mark you—I would seek to amend the motion by moving "that the meetings be Mondays, Thursdays, and Saturdays at 10 o'clock, and with recess only for lunch, remain in session until 5 p. m., until the publicity bill submitted by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] was fully considered and voted out; and on such a vote as that, if one could be had, I want to say that all of my Democratic colleagues would vote in the affirmative and all of my Republican colleagues—I will not say that, but Mr. GAINES of West Virginia, Mr. NORRIS of Nebraska, Mr. BROOKS of Colorado, Mr. DUNWELL, Mr. CAMPBELL of Ohio, and Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania, if here—would vote in the negative, or again contradict themselves.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to say, if I may be permitted to proceed in order, that when the hour of adjournment of that committee should arrive, and a gentleman on that side of the aisle should move to adjourn, I would move, in view of the importance of this great question, "that the committee adjourn until 2 o'clock to-day, and at that hour reconvene and remain in session until 5 o'clock this evening, giving consideration to the bill heretofore submitted by the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia;" and on that motion I ought to say to this committee, if a vote was had here, every one of the Republicans whose names I have heretofore given and whose names I will put in the RECORD would vote against the motion and all the Democrats whose names I have used would vote for it. Then, Mr. Chairman, I want to say now, because I think I have passed beyond the point where there can be differences, that I regret very much gentlemen have such a fellow-feeling for members of our committee that they will not let us fight this out among ourselves. I regret that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who favors publicity and opposes these great corruption funds, I suppose, and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], whom I also know to be an honorable man, and who does not approve of the use of the $16,000,000 by which voters of our country were debauched and the best and purest man that ever shone in the political firmament of this country was robbed of an election to the Presidency [applause on the Democratic side]—I regret, I repeat, that this small handful of Democrats, only five, and that great majority of eight Republicans on the committee can not fight this out without the great, ponderous weight of the gentleman from New York being thrown upon that side of the scales. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I want to serve notice here now that while I respect for the time being, under compulsion, the rules of this House [laughter], I want to say to you, sir, that I have more supreme regard for the approval of the humblest citizen of my district on a question of duty performed than I have for the approval of the entire majority membership of this House when it comes to the observance of a mere rule which covers up and hides from view the acts of men who are charged with official responsibility. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of course, gentlemen of the committee, those who constitute the majority of the Committee on Election of the President and Vice-President and Members of Congress, are in favor of publicity. They say so, and the newspapers quote them thus; but, unfortunately, every act, except expressions which have gone to the country through the columns of newspapers, contradicts their statements. I make no accusation against anybody, but I want to suggest that the record which I am forbidden to read, if read to this House, would justify a strong suspicion that some at least of the gentlemen whose names I have called are at heart opposed to publicity legislation. And why? Every member of one political party, the Democratic, if this question was submitted here, where I have a right to say what my colleagues would do, would vote for publicity in its widest and broadest form, and, judging the future by the past, every gentleman on the majority side of that committee would vote against it or again contradict themselves. I do not propose to allow blame to attach unjustly to the minority of that committee if I can prevent it, rules or no rules. As members of that committee it is our duty to aid and not stifle legislation. We of the minority spurn the protection of the arbitrary rules of this House.

We have performed our duty and our record is clear. I invite gentlemen to read it. The more it is read the more the country will condemn the party in power for its inaction and its obstruction. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We do not apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that there is any dread consequence in publicity to the Democratic party. We do not think it is necessary to rely upon great sums of boodle and slush in order to retain our numerical strength upon this floor, but we know, or we think we know, if we can prevent the Republican party from using boodle we will be strong enough to elect the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] Speaker of the House in the Sixtieth Congress [applause on the Democratic side], provided, of course, that my good friend and colleague from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is not a candidate. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not only that, but with such legislation as this we will yet elect to the Chief Magistracy of the United States that peerless—yes, I say peerless, because the brightest star in your party when compared with the grandeur of William J. Bryan suffers as doth the lightning bug when compared with the brilliancy and glory of the sun. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. RUCKER. Five minutes, and I will proceed in order. Mr. Chairman, quoting a phrase quite familiar to Members of Congress, I ask "why hesitate" about giving this House in its wisdom an opportunity to express its judgment upon the great question of publicity? Is it possible that publicity will reveal in either party a putrid, leprous condition, so foul that its stench in the nostrils of good men would cause them to flee from that party as from a pestilence? The principle of publicity is nonpartisan. Its enactment into law is demanded by good men, and Mr. Chairman, if I may do so, I want to italicize the words, "is demanded by good men" of all parties. Every man who really loves his country and who desires to elevate and not degrade public morals is an advocate of this form of legislation. The honor of the Republic and the purity and sanctity of its elections demand publicity of campaign contributions. Every man worthy of a position of honor, confidence, and trust demands or ought to demand to know that the commission he bears from a proud constituency is unsullied and unstained by crime. The people demand a law of publicity, and if the party in power neglects to enact it, then, in my judgment, the anathemas of an outraged populace will be hurled against those responsible for the failure. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Under the wise and just rulings of the Chair, may I be permitted to have access to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to publish anything I have said?

The CHAIRMAN. Anything that is in order.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to know how far your censorship extends?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled on that question and the rule of the House has been read, and the gentleman knows when he is in and when he is out of order.

Mr. PALMER. Before the gentleman sits down, I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly. And I would like for some members of my committee to ask me a question also.

Mr. PALMER. I have had a bill or two before your committee on this subject, and I have not succeeded in getting them out.

Mr. RUCKER. Until we get a new deal they will never be acted on, my good friend.

Mr. PALMER. Is not this your complaint now, that the committee has not reported your bill?

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask you a question?

Mr. PALMER. I am asking you a question now. I say, is not your complaint that the committee declines or refuses to report your bill?

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman knows that is not true. I have said repeatedly that I favor any publicity measure, and that I am not wedded to the bill I introduced or to any particular phrase in it.

Mr. PALMER. Is not the reason because the committee did not report your bill?

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the question is entirely out of order.

Mr. RUCKER. If you will allow me to go into the committee room and state what occurred——

Mr. PALMER. Do you think your bill is perfect and that it ought to be reported in preference to any other bill?

Mr. RUCKER. I will put in the RECORD, with the Chairman's consent, an admission of the fact that my bill may be imperfect and perhaps is imperfect, but it is the best I can draft. I wish the gentleman would help me to perfect it. My bill is not as complete as the Commandments, I admit, but it would catch many a corruptionist, some of whom live not a thousand miles from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.] And I have no reference to the gentleman.

Mr. PALMER. That is what I want. I want the bill to be broad enough and good enough when it is brought in here to accomplish something. I do not think your bill will catch anything.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the better the bill is the less chance it has of enactment.

Mr. PALMER. The what?

Mr. RUCKER. The better a bill is the more certain it is to be condemned and doomed in that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. I will not infringe on the patience of the House to that extent, but in view of the pernicious activity of some gentlemen, and the pressure brought to bear on some others, I will consume a few minutes in which to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that he misquotes me, inadvertently, of course, because it is not in his heart to do a malicious, wanton wrong; and his error can not be due to ignorance, because he is one of the most distinguished lawyers of this House. But the gentleman, by reason of partisan bias, which blinds him, sees no merit in the bill I introduced. I invite him, and I invite his colleagues, I invite any of the distinguished members of this great reform organization to modify, to correct, or destroy my bill, and give us something better or as good in its place, and I will vote for it. Not only that, but I pledge the Democrats of this committee and I believe that I am not saying too much when I say that I pledge the Democratic party to do anything that will make the corruptionists of this country come from under cover so that honest men may see them, because any man—every honest man—will condemn them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman——

Mr. PALMER. If you will agree to vote for my bill, I will agree to help you perfect yours.

Mr. RUCKER. Why did not the gentleman offer that before Congress was about to adjourn? I really believe the gentleman favors publicity, because he introduced a bill upon that subject. Why did not the gentleman help me? I have been struggling and fighting before that committee, but it has been a fight of five against eight, a minority fighting to overcome a partisan majority. You gentlemen on the Republican side had better get active. You daily hear the murmuring of the people. You are witnessing with dismay the people of your own States instructing for a man so popular and so great that you realize that in the next election most of you, unless you become very proficient as apologists and cunning in explanation, will be relegated to the rear and Democrats will occupy this House clear over to the Cherokee Strip on the other side. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is my last appearance, and I want to thank the committee for its courtesy, but before yielding the floor——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question——

Mr. RUCKER. I am just about to deliver my peroration.

Mr. OLMSTED. It will not interfere with your peroration.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, it will not matter if it is lost.

Mr. OLMSTED. The Constitution provides that the States shall prescribe the times, manner, and method of elections of Congressmen——

Mr. RUCKER. That is enough; I catch the gentleman's point——

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, I want to state to you, inasmuch as you made some reference to Pennsylvania, we have just passed a law within the last six months, forty times stronger than your bill. It is so strict in its provisions against the expenditure of money improperly that if a man even thinks about it, it will bring him within the provisions of the law. If you pass such a law in Missouri you will have no trouble.

Mr. RUCKER. We have a good law in Missouri. My humble opinion is that in your State you can not prevent corruption in politics without hanging a lot of criminals. You can not stop political corruption there by law, because the law will not be enforced. Good people have got to take some of the criminals out and execute them. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. We have got a law enacted in the last six months that practically provides execution for anybody that violates it.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman speaks of the law in Pennsylvania, and it really affords reason to hope, if the gentleman properly construes the law of his own State, that Pennsylvania is preparing to join the solid South and break into the Democratic column.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the committee now for the courtesy shown me and to express my appreciation of and obligation to the Chairman for his very kindly consideration on all the questions that have arisen during this brief discussion. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, before I take my seat I desire to obtain unanimous consent to publish, as an appendix to my remarks, a list of the names of the members of the National Publicity bill organization. It is very short.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. His request is that he be permitted to append to his remarks a list of the names of the members of the National Publicity Bureau, which is very short. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understood the Chair to order that the Official Reporters should strike from the RECORD certain remarks which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] made. Now, the parliamentary inquiry is how the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole gets any control over the RECORD at all?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule gives the Chairman the right to enforce order in the Committee of the Whole, and such remarks as were made after the gentleman was called to order and after he was ruled out of order should be left out of the RECORD—that is, such remarks as were out of order after the gentleman was called to order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But how do you get control over the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The Speakers have always exercised it in the House, and the rule gives the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole the same right to enforce order in committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No. Now, if the Chair will bear with me a minute, the situation is this: The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] had pronounced but about one-half of one sentence. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] impinged into the situation and insisted not only that what the gentleman from Missouri was about to say was out of order, but that what he had said ought to be stricken out of the RECORD. My understanding was that the Chair sustained the contention of the gentleman from Ohio. Well, I submit now, with all good feeling for the Chair and for everybody else, that the Chair had no right to make any such order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it not true that the Committee of the Whole makes its own RECORD? The House can not know officially of the RECORD of the Committee of the Whole, and it can only revise the RECORD when the Committee of the Whole does an improper thing or puts an improper thing in the RECORD. It seems to me logically the Committee of the Whole must control its own record. It makes the RECORD and it must control it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; here is the procedure, Mr. Chairman, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]: If anything is spoken on the floor in Committee of the Whole and any gentleman thinks that that language ought to go out of the RECORD, then it becomes the duty of the Committee of the Whole to rise and report the proceedings to the House and have it stricken out by the House or have it left in by the House. Now, just one word more, if the Chair will permit me. This is the first time I ever heard that rule invoked in this House anyhow. I have heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] repeatedly refer on the floor of this House to things that happened in the committee, and I have done it myself.

Mr. KEIFER. That does not change the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The committee will be in order. All gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to refer the Chair to the authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please take their seats. The Chair desires to call the gentleman's attention to Hinds's Parliamentary Precedents, page 884:

Mr. Kem, of Nebraska, rising to a parliamentary inquiry, asked if the remarks made by the gentleman upon the floor, out of order, were entitled to go into the RECORD, when objection was made. Mr. GROSVENOR, of Ohio, made the point of order that the RECORD was not before the House and that the gentleman was not charged with any duty regarding it until the next morning. The Speaker said:

"The Chair is obliged to say that the question of what goes into the RECORD is somewhat of a disputed point. Whatever is presented as a question of privilege and as a part of the proceedings of the House ought to go into the RECORD, but what is said after the question has been ruled upon by the Chair the Chair thinks ought not to go into the RECORD."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But my understanding was that the Chair sustained the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] had just said should be stricken out of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri misunderstood the Chair, because the Chair distinctly said that what was said by the gentleman from Missouri after the point was made and sustained should not go into the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I took no interest in or thought of what was going on until I heard the gentleman from Missouri called to order, and then, in obedience to a mind I have had I made the suggestion, which I have more than once made when a Member has been called to order and proceeds to talk, that what he says ought not to go into the RECORD. I do not know what it was the gentleman was saying, and I do not care. I felt no interest in the question under discussion. Now, a single word further. How can you present to the House tomorrow morning the RECORD of the House truthfully as to what took place in the Committee of the Whole? And necessarily the gentleman from Missouri will find that the rulings upon questions of privilege all along the line are solved in this way, that whatever took place in Committee of the Whole can be regulated and controlled by the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Chair ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled, and there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to read one citation to show that the Chair ruled wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will stand by his ruling.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Right or wrong?

The CHAIRMAN. Right or wrong. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAINES of West Virginia) there were—ayes 141, noes 37.

So the committee determined to rise; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reported that that committee had had under consideration the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 15331, with the statement, for printing in the RECORD, under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The report and statement will be printed under the rule.

PROCEEDINGS IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. For the purpose of having a question of order settled.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A question of the highest privilege of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the course of certain remarks by Judge RUCKER——

The SPEAKER. Where did the gentleman make the remarks?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the Committee of the Whole. This affects the RECORD, if the Speaker pleases. The gentleman from Missouri, Judge RUCKER, was making remarks on the publicity bill and had delivered about one-half of a certain sentence when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] raised the question of order that he was violating the rule that prohibits reference to what happened in a committee of the House. Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] insisted that not only what Judge RUCKER said subsequent to that in the same line should be stricken from the RECORD, but what he said prior to that, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected, should be stricken out of the RECORD. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURTIS, for whom I have the kindliest feelings, sustained a part of the motion of the gentleman from Ohio; that is, as to what Judge RUCKER said after he was called to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair has no knowledge of what took place in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is a committee consisting of all the Members, and the Chair has no means of ascertaining what took place in that committee except upon a report by the Chairman of that committee to the House. The Chair knows nothing from that report. The Chair has a precedent that is in hand, which will be found on page 403 of the Manual. It is as follows:

The Speaker can not rule in regard to what occurs in Committee of the Whole unless the point of order is reported to the House for decision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly what I am doing now.

The SPEAKER. But some other Member might disagree with the gentleman. The gentleman from Missouri bears no mission from the Committee of the Whole House to report to the House what happened there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be overpersistent, but I have two citations in point also which I will read, if the Speaker will permit me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, through courtesy, will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not care how I obtain the right, if I can read it. [Laughter.] I read from page 403 of the Manual, near the middle of the page:

The Committee of the Whole, having no control over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, reported to the House an alleged breach of privilege involved in the reading of an anonymous letter in the committee, and the House struck the letter from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Precisely, but the gentleman is hoist by his own——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish the Speaker would proceed, for that is a good quotation from Shakespeare. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. What the gentleman has just read is exactly in point as sustaining the Chair.

The Committee of the Whole, having no control over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, reported to the House an alleged breach of privilege involved in the reading of an anonymous letter in the committee, and the House struck the letter from the RECORD.

Now, there is no report touching this matter made from the committee to the House, and therefore there is nothing upon which to base action.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me make just two remarks. The first one is that the first half of that quotation shows that the Committee of the Whole has no control over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the second is that while it is true, as the Speaker stated, that I bear no commission to report from the Committee of the Whole, the Speaker of this House has an absolute machine whereby he may find out what the Committee of the Whole did. All that the Speaker has to do is to summon the Reporters and find out precisely what took place.

The SPEAKER. And then, under the rules of the House, the Speaker would become what the Speaker at times thinks his critics are not justified in calling him, a real czar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill, and in connection therewith move that all general debate on the bill close at 3 o'clock, the time to be equally divided, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and the other half by myself, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that motion the gentleman moves that all general debate close at 3 o'clock.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. To be equally divided, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. But that is not in order. That can not be done now.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, have I the right to be recognized on this question?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, it is amendable, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is mistaken. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole is not debatable or amendable, but the motion to limit the time of general debate is amendable, in the opinion of the Chair. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question upon the motion.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to be recognized on that motion?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been moved, and the very object of the previous question is to cut off debate and amendments. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PERKINS) there were—ayes 126, noes 86.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to close debate at 3 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PERKINS) there were—ayes 100, noes 93.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Six gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, a demand for tellers was made.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I maintain that it is too late for tellers.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, a demand was made for tellers. It was not answered because a demand for the yeas and nays was made and took the place of it, and, as I understand, a demand for the yeas and nays takes the Member making the demand for tellers off his feet. The yeas and nays have been refused, and therefore I think the demand for tellers is now in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, after inquiry, does not find that this question is controlled or enlightened by a precedent. There may be precedents in the premises, but, if so, they can not be found after hasty examination. Now, the gentleman demanded tellers. Pending that demand the yeas and nays were demanded and the yeas and nays were refused. It does seem to the Chair that the demand for tellers, not having been disposed of, might be regarded as pending, because, perchance, the Chair may have miscounted, the vote being close, or, perchance, gentlemen may have changed their judgment between the time the count was made by the Chair and the present time. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me for a moment, or has the Chair decided the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it has been the universal custom in this House that the call for the yeas and nays overrides the call for tellers as a higher parliamentary proceeding and privilege.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, that is why I yielded to the call for yeas and nays. That call for the yeas and nays, however, was not seconded by the House. I now make the call for tellers. I entirely agree with the gentleman. He is exactly right, and the Chair sustains the point.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor——

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order!

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURLESON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania (continuing). That general debate on this bill close at the end of four hours, two hours on either side, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and the other half by myself. I think that meets everybody's desires.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to be heard on any motion?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to state the reasons for the position I have taken. I have no desire in any way to harass or delay the business of the House, but in this long debate upon the diplomatic bill Mr. FOSTER of Vermont and myself, of the committee, fourth and fifth on the committee, were each entitled to one hour in our own right. We have yielded and have been glad to yield to Mr. DALZELL and to others who have spoken on important questions all the time that they desired. Now, I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, nor has my associate, Mr. FOSTER, to occupy an hour in our own right, but I do desire the time I have promised certain gentlemen, who, I think, have the right to be heard—the balance of my hour. I wish to have the right to dispose of one hour of this debate, and I am sure that the House, when I have been willing to yield to others who have desired to speak on important questions, will not wish that any member of the committee shall lose his right to one hour for himself or to be given by himself to such other members of the House as have asked for the time and, in his opinion, are justly entitled to have it.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am asking the time for these very two gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs to the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service, Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is limited to four hours, two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia, and two hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES.]

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have some embarrassment in following the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] because I shall endeavor to be bound by the rules of the House, and in the outset I want to say that if at any time I transgress them, I shall be obliged if the Chair or any other Member will direct my attention to that fact. Also, I shall say in beginning, Mr. Chairman, as bearing on the subject of publicity in election expenses and of law relative to that subject, that the speech of the gentleman from Missouri shows how futile are rules to bind gentlemen who wish to evade and elude them. Early in this session, Mr. Chairman, a scheme to exploit a particular measure with reference to publicity in election expenses engrossed the attention of the press of this country, attracted the attention of the public to some extent and made considerable impression upon the Members of this House. The result of that exploitation in newspapers with reference to the subject of publicity in election contributions was a bill (H. R. 11642) known generally as the "Belmont bill," promoted by the energy of Mr. Perry Belmont, and introduced into this House by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL]. That bill upon the first reading recommends itself to the judgment of those people who desire to prevent election corruption by giving publicity to election contributions, but I submit to the judgment of anybody who will read it carefully this proposition, that no man can look into that bill without saying that it is drawn, not designedly, I believe, but successfully drawn for the purpose of giving no embarrassment to the man who wishes to contribute to election expenses; and that it would hamper only the man who is conscientious enough to pay attention to the spirit of the law, even when the letter of the law is easy to evade. This bill provides for publicity in election contributions that are made to aid elections of Members of Congress in two or more States of the Union, and made to a political committee having jurisdiction in two or more States of the Union. What futile nonsense, is this, Mr. Chairman!

Contributions to elect Members of Congress or Presidential electors in two or more States of the Union, and to a committee having jurisdiction in two or more States of the Union! It would look as though the gentleman who first drew this bill remembered the situation of the Democratic party. It would look as if he did not desire, for instance, to hamper contributions made to the city committee or the Tammany committee of the city of New York. A great corporation, under the Belmont bill, without any embarrassment whatever, any rich man who chose, could contribute all the millions he desired to the committee of the city of New York to any State committee in the State of New York, or Indiana, or West Virginia, or Missouri—the State of my distinguished colleague upon the committee, Mr. RUCKER. Persons or the corporations might contribute in every Congressional district in the United States and in every county in the United States. Recognizing that condition, what happened? I shall not state what happened in the committee. I shall not state any conditional proposition, and evade the rule when the Chair calls me to order. As I have said once before, those are matters of propriety, and address themselves to the individual discretion and disposition of each particular gentleman. But I will——

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I decline to yield. I have only ten minutes and the gentleman had twenty-five.

Mr. RUCKER. I advised the gentleman that I would make use of occurrences in committee.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I admit that. I do not wish to attempt what the gentleman has just done, because I am trying to avoid your open breach of the rules of this House. I decline to yield further, and the gentleman must recognize the justice of it. I will tell you what did happen, from the records of this House. On the 8th day of this month the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] introduced H. R. 19078. An examination of that bill discloses—what? That the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] agrees with everything I have said—that the Belmont bill is so faulty that it would accomplish nothing in the way of publicity of elections, nor constitute one single influence toward honesty and decency of elections or publicity in election contributions. [Applause on the Republican side.] It shows, Mr. Chairman, further—it shows that the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] recognizes the fact that no Federal election law—and it is a strange thing that the Democratic party should be standing here as the champion of Federal election law in this Congress, I remark in passing—it shows that he has by his act admitted and by his bill asserted that no Federal election law can reach the difficulty sought to be reached unless we concede that the Government of the United States in matters of elections may not only regulate the contributions of money to elect Members of Congress and Presidential electors, but that it may go beyond it and take jurisdiction of every contribution with reference to every person to be voted for at any election where Members of Congress may by law be voted for.

The bill of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] provides that Congress can take jurisdiction of contributions to State committees. It provides that punishment may be had through the Federal courts of anybody who contribute to a State committee pending any election at which Members of Congress and Presidential electors may by law be voted for. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, what reason was there for stopping there? If the Belmont bill was perfect, as you have asserted, notwithstanding your act here in introducing your bill, notwithstanding the flattery you put in the RECORD this morning concerning the Belmont bill, what is the reason for its being defective? Because it did not include State committees? What reasonable man can claim that your bill is other than mere nonsense and balderdash and claptrap and an appeal to the uninformed when it stops at State committees? [Applause on the Republican side.] What good was there in doing it? And what eulogy is to be made of that measure? The gentleman does not claim it is perfect. I announce and assert that no bill ever introduced in this or any other legislative body had fewer of the earmarks of perfection than that bill of yours.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. No; I will not. If my time be extended I will yield to anybody with great pleasure, and to no one with more pleasure than to the gentleman from Texas. Now, then, since it seems that public opinion was changed in this country, since it seemed that the Republican party was not to be denounced——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Since, Mr. Chairman, it seemed that the Republican party, which has been in the past so severely criticised by its Democratic friends because it favored a Federal election law, was now to be assailed from that same high source because it was not ready enough to take Federal jurisdiction of elections in this country, I myself, having none of the constitutional difficulties on that subject so offensive to my Democratic friends, until I found that the gentleman from Missouri had taken the lead and crossed the Rubicon, and asserted that every election in this country, for every officer voted for where a Member of Congress might be voted for, might be controlled and ought to be, at least, in part, controlled by the Federal Government, I introduced a measure on May 21, 1906, which provided for publicity not only for contributions made under the Belmont law, to elect Members of Congress and Presidential electors in two or more States, not only, as in the Rucker bill, contributions made to State committees, but to control contributions made to elect any officer, or to any person or committee in aid of the election of any officer, who was to be voted for at the same time that a Member of Congress was to be voted for. Unless we can wipe out the difficulties of State lines in the matter of Federal jurisdiction to control election expenses, it is absolute demagogy, in my opinion, to endeavor to pass any legislation at all on this subject. If we may go that far, then we may do it with success. It makes no difference whether the money contributed to influence elections be contributed to a Member of Congress, or a Presidential elector, or to elect a governor, or a State officer, or some county or city officer to be voted for in the same ballot box. Knowing this, I introduced the bill H. R. 19515. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that it is absolutely useless and absurd for the people of this country to demand plenary relief at the hands of Congress, and not give full jurisdiction to deal with the subject or consent to the exercise of that full jurisdiction.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Though it is not just, I will yield to the gentleman as the more polite course.

Mr. RUCKER. Did I not urge in every way that I could the taking up of the bill and reporting it?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I shall not now, Mr. Chairman, criticise the ingenuousness, or lack of it, on the part of the gentleman who asks me to follow him into an open violation of the rules; but I say this, that an examination of this bill will, in my opinion, show that if the Federal Government has jurisdiction enough to accomplish anything the bill I introduced will reach the point. It may be violated. It can not be evaded. Now, the bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] and the one introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] nobody would violate, because the merest child could evade it with impunity, or know how to do it.

There are some people, it is to be remembered in matters of election laws, as I stated in the beginning, who do not need drastic rules to control them, and others, again, can not be controlled by any rule or the underlying sense of propriety which led to its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I will say, however, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], in reply to his question, that if my bill be faulty in one particular matter, to which I myself called the attention of the committee and upon which I asked the committee's advice and suggestions—viz, with respect to the time when expenditures must be reported, as relating to the last expenditures made during any campaign—with that possible exception, I believe, it reaches the point. And the remarks made by the gentleman from Missouri, in violation of the rules of this House, show that if he filibustered against the consideration and consumed the time of the committee it is no fault of mine.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman knows that is not a fact, and he will not assert that as a fact.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Your speech will prove it. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, after we have had three or four days of exciting debate upon a question as burning as that of tariff legislation, it may be a soothing change to the committee if we return to the dignified calm of the diplomatic service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I wish to say in connection with the service may have some interest to the members of this House, because I wish to furnish some figures in connection with the civil service of the United States and the service of Members of this House of Representatives. Two or three weeks ago there was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill in reference to the consular service, and at that time it was suggested that similar legislation might be unfavorably regarded, because it might tend to diminish the patronage sometimes exercised by Members of the House in reference to the appointment of those connected with the consular service. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that such bits of patronage as exist with reference to the consular service are absorbed at the other end of the Capitol, and rarely, indeed, do they reach this House. But beyond that I wish to suggest to the attention of the committee not only my own views, but my own views based upon the records of the House of Representatives, in reference to the usefulness of any form of patronage to us.

I should say in this connection a word in reference to a criticism often made outside as to the consular bill. There was a demand that came to many Members of this House from many organizations and leagues for the reformation of the consular service, asking that Congress insert in that bill a provision requiring that appointments to the consular service should in future be made by what is called a "civil service examination." Now, I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that those demands, no matter how worthy the gentlemen or the organization from which they have come, seem to me essentially futile. Everyone of us knows, or should know, that under the Constitution the Congress of the United States has no power to limit the choice of the Executive, given him by the Constitution, with reference to foreign ambassadors and consuls. It is said that such a provision as is demanded might state and record the solemn opinion of Congress. I submit that it is not the business of Congress to pass what should be called a law that may be obeyed or that may be disobeyed. When we pass a law, we pass a law that must be obeyed. We do not pass a law that in the form of law is mere advice. Furthermore, the demand that is made upon us is made to the wrong place. If the gentlemen interested in a change, in a reformation or improvement of the consular service, wish to effect the change they ask for, they should turn their artillery not upon Congress, which does not have the power, but upon the Executive, which does have the power. If it is an improvement to have the members of the consular service chosen by a civil-service examination, to have it wholly taken out of political influence, that change can be made to-morrow by Executive order, and any President can follow it so long as he sees fit; but not for one single day is he bound to follow such a system, though Congress should pass laws from now until the end of this session upon the subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I desired to say about the effects of the civil service was a little different. We have had very many Members of this House complaining in reference to the effects of the civil-service system. I am not here either to attack or to defend that system. I recognize the fact that there are many persons in the service of this Government who have attained their positions by the system now in force who have become inert from age, who are useless from indolence, who show their only signs of activity when they demand shorter hours of work or larger rates of pay. I recognize the fact, also, that in former days there were many persons appointed to the civil service whose activity displayed in carrying caucuses did not show in them any fitness to copy records of the Treasury Department.

But what I want to suggest is not the effect of our civil-service system upon the civil service itself, but its effect upon the tenure of office of Members of the House of Representatives.

I assume that in desiring the possession of patronage and the power of appointment no one of us is entirely altruistic. I assume that we gentlemen do not desire the possession of patronage solely to do good to somebody else without any thought of whether it will do good to ourselves; I assume, and it is neither a violent nor an improper assumption, that the desire of Members of this House is, as it properly may be, for such reasonable continuation of their own service in the House as they can properly obtain. And as bearing upon that I desire to submit to the Committee of the Whole some figures which I owe to my friend and colleague [Mr. ALEXANDER], whom I do not now see here, but whose valuable book upon the political history of the State of New York will soon appear, and will, I am certain, furnish both interest and profit to all who may read it.

It appears that the State of New York from the time of its organization down to the year 1860 was represented by about 600 Members of Congress in all. How many do the members of this committee suppose of those 600 Members of Congress served only one term? Four hundred Members, two-thirds of the entire number of Representatives from the State of New York from 1789 to 1860, served only one term in Congress. How many were able to stay in two terms? One hundred and fifty only. One hundred and fifty, one-quarter of the membership, were enabled to keep themselves in Congress for two Congressional terms. Of that whole 600 Members there were only 50, only one-twelfth, that were allowed to remain in Congress more than two terms, and there was only one out of the 600 during a period of seventy years that was elected by his constituents for ten terms in Congress. The name of that gentleman, whose career is so unique in our early history, I am sorry to say I have forgotten. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, during all that period Members of Congress had to the fullest extent the possession of political patronage; there was no civil service to rob them of their rights. Every man who got a position in Washington, and every man who got a position out of Washington, had to obtain the sign manual, the recommendation of the Member from his district. What does it show, Mr. Chairman, when 400 Members of Congress, although possessed of this political patronage, were cut off at the end of their first term of Congress? Does it show that political patronage is, as is supposed by some, a means to lengthen political life, or does it show, Mr. Chairman, that it is a means of hastening political death?

Similar figures are shown for the next period of twenty years, and then we come down to what may be called "the present time," to the period when patronage has been so largely cut off that you might almost say that it is nonexistent. What has been the effect of this change upon the terms of Members of Congress? For the purpose of this argument, I do not care what has been the effect upon the character of the men that have been appointed. The House of Representatives is a part of the Government; some think not an important part, but still it remains a part. We have a right to consider the effect upon the service, upon the House of Representatives of any change made in our political system.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us take the present House of Representatives; and many changes have been made, because four years ago the size of the membership was increased, and, as a result, nearly 10 per cent of new members were added. Yet more than one-half of the present House of Representatives have served more than two terms. Of the 600 men sent by the State of New York during seventy years, two-thirds only got a chance to sit in Congress for two years. Their political lives were brought to an end, not in their political manhood, but in their political babyhood. They possessed all the powers of patronage, and yet they come to an early and untimely end. In this House of Representatives only one man in six or seven is now serving his first term, whereas in New York formerly two-thirds were first-term men. Take the delegation from the State of New York, and over one-half of them, nearly three-quarters, have served more than two terms. Formerly only one-third of the membership were allowed to serve two terms. In other words, the average length of service of Members of Congress either from New York or elsewhere has nearly doubled.

Let us take another figure. In the New York delegation, formerly only 1 man out of 600 served ten terms, and only 1 man out of 12 served more than two terms. Now one-twelfth of the House of Representatives have served seven terms or more. In the New York delegation, where for seventy long years we find only one man that could keep in Congress for ten terms, we have now three Members that have served more than ten terms, one Member who has served nine terms, and two-thirds have served three terms.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the explanation of this? Take the delegation of the State of New York. That delegation—I say it without any undue modesty—I do not believe that the delegation from the State of New York, on an average, is any better or is any wiser than the representation which that State had during those seventy long years. I am free to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think it is, on an average, any worse delegation. We hear talk about the superiority, the greater wisdom, and greater patriotism of the earlier Congresses, but I confess that in that I do not believe. I imagine that on an average we are just about as good as our predecessors were, and we are no better. So it is evident, Mr. Chairman, that our longer tenure of office is not to any large extent due to any superiority in wisdom or any superiority in virtue.

It will be said that there is a greater tendency in the country to continue the same men in Congress. That is undoubtedly the fact, Mr. Chairman, but the question is, What is the explanation of the fact? If you find any change in public opinion, you may be certain that there are reasons back of the change. It seems to me that the reasons are perfectly apparent. Our predecessors had unlimited patronage. Where they appointed one man they necessarily disappointed ten men. Those men at once formed a coherent body, who said, "If we can get out the man who is in, the man who is out will get us in." There was, when a new man came up for nomination to defeat the sitting Member, a coherent body of workers who were actuated by the hope—by the belief—that if they could get their man in there was a $1,200 job down in Washington waiting for them. Well, there is no use of promising those jobs now, because even the boys in the wards know there are no such jobs to give, and it results that instead of the constant presence of a coherent body working to get out the sitting Member in hopes of furthering their own personal interests, the sitting Member is left undisturbed unless he has given dissatisfaction to the community as a whole. Mr. Chairman, that is the explanation, it seems to me. It must be the chief and almost the only explanation of the notable fact of the gradually increasing tenure of office in the House of Representatives during the last twenty years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who is giving us such valuable information whether he has made any investigation as to how many of these Members were defeated because they were not renominated or how many were defeated because of the changeable politics of New York State.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I say, in answer to that, the politics of New York State were changeable then, and they are changeable now. In our present delegation of thirty-seven Members there were seven or eight changes due to political changes, not due to defeats in nominations, but to defeats in elections. And that is always true in the State of New York. I do not think that there were any more changes due to changes in elections in the State of New York during the first seventy years than there have been during the last twenty-five years. The percentage of change is always larger in New York than it is in many other States, and it is for this reason that I have taken comparative statistics from the State of New York, where the same conditions still exist.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that there has been a growing tendency in the State of New York to continue Members in the House from the State of New York because it has become apparent that States that have retained Members here continuously for a long time have had in proportion to the number of their delegation a much larger influence and domination in legislation in Congress; and was not that notably the fact in the case of the State of Maine a few years ago, and in the case of the State of Iowa? There are a number of other States that can be mentioned with a comparatively small number of representatives, who, by reason of their long service and power acquired by committee positions, have a much greater influence than a much larger delegation from a larger State.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would say in answer that the States of Maine and Iowa have always been represented with great ability undoubtedly, and yet no more so on an average than the State of New York. I do not think the explanation of the gentleman is an explanation of the problem. If there were 500 men in the gentleman's district who thought they could get some position in Washington if they could get him out and get somebody else in, they would not be hampered by any considerations of whether the good of the State at large would be benefited, because his longer service might make him more useful.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman does not think that 500 men in any one district would believe that they could get one position or that there would be 500 positions that could be obtained by any one Member?

Mr. PERKINS. In answer to that I will say that in what are called the "good old days" it was a poor Congressman who did not have at least fifty positions he could give, and it was a poor candidate for Congress who could not promise each one of those to ten men. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would not be true of a Representative from a large city. It might be in the rural districts, where they have the post-office patronage.

Mr. PERKINS. But apart from that, let me suggest to my friend, it is not the patronage in the city itself. I have heard the incident told of one gentleman, from, I think, the State of Indiana, who came down here twenty-five years ago and in the Departments in Washington obtained from fifty to sixty positions, but who was defeated for his renomination because the man in the next district, as was said, had obtained for his constituents between seventy and eighty positions. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to think for a moment of these great Departments in the city of Washington, with their thousands of employees, and of how many my friend would be entitled to under a Democratic administration, if he had the fair quota of his district, out of the thousands and thousands and thousands of employees in those different Departments here in the city of Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, with sixteen Representatives from my city, my quota would be pretty small.

Mr. PERKINS. It might make his constituents so greedy with desire that even with his abilities they might make it impossible for him to retain his seat so long as I hope he may.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have been very much interested in these figures, and I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any data as to the length of service of Members of the House from New York between 1860—the time that his data seems to close, according to his statement—and in 1882, when the civil-service law was first inaugurated?

Mr. PERKINS. I can only say in reference to that, I was informed by my friend, Colonel Alexander, that he had not the precise figures, but he thought that they did not vary largely. He thought, if I remember correctly, that they did not vary materially from the figures he had down to 1860. I must give you his answer just as he gave it to me. I would say, from my knowledge of the politics of western New York, which I have and as I remember as a boy and by reading, I do not think the gentleman would find much difference between 1860 and 1880 and 1790 and 1860.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask another question? Is it not further true that terms of office in New York State, in the assembly and the senate and other official places, have been extended during this late period longer than they were years ago?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know how that is.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not that the general tendency in New York State, to give officials longer periods in public office?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I could not say they are materially longer in members of the lower house of the legislature. In western New York the term is still two years for about nine-tenths, and about one-tenth get a longer tenure up where we are and in Syracuse. You will not find many members of the assembly who get over two terms.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Some of them get five or six.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; some.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not that because members are of such capacity that after two terms in the assembly they are candidates for what they term "higher places?"

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; I think not. I do not know what they are candidates for, but nine-tenths of them are retired without getting it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A great many of the gentleman's party, I am sure, do advance to higher places, and that is one reason why they do not continue in the assembly.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; some of them do.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think at present there are other avenues of ambition, so that less men in New York care to go to Congress now than formerly?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I think the proportion is just the same. Formerly there was only one Member for every fifty or sixty thousand population; now there is one for 225,000. I can assure my friend that he would find among the people whom he represents so well just as many who would be glad to get his place, if they could, as was the case forty years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have already talked longer than I proposed. I only wish to suggest this to the gentlemen of the committee in closing. It seems to me that a man who desires to subject himself to all the annoyances and all the vexations of having to make political appointments, with a very good chance that he will get turned out of Congress as a reward for his pains, requires a high degree of political unselfishness. Whatever may be said of civil-service reform, to Members of Congress it has been an unmixed blessing. It has made our lives happier; it has made our term of service longer. If there is anybody who wants to overthrow that system in order that he may get a job for some ungrateful constituent, he may be a very philanthropic man for the interest of others, but if he considers his own interest, it seems to me that he is a good deal of a fool. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirteen minutes remaining.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 18439. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tallahatchie River, in Tallahatchie County, Miss.;

H. R. 18026. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.; and

H. R. 17507. An act to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 18537. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907;

H. R. 12064. An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902; and

H. R. 15266. An act to amend existing laws relating to fortification of pure sweet wines.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6243. An act to amend an act approved March 2, 1903, entitled "An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands;"

S. 4716. An act authorizing the procuring of additional lands for the enlargement of the site and for necessary improvements for the public building at Butte, Mont.; and

S. 4400. An act to grant certain lands to the town of Fruita, Colo.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FLOOD. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LAMAR].

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the Members during the time allotted to me upon a much-discussed, long-protracted, and debated question—the railroad rate question. One would think that the Members here and the public had heard that subject almost ad nauseam, to say nothing of ad infinitum, but when the Hepburn bill finally passes, even with the remedial amendments impressed upon it by the Senate, it will still leave the shippers of Florida and the consumers and producers of that State largely defenseless against railway extortion and railway exactions, and for that defenseless position the American Congress is responsible, Democrats and Republicans alike.

This question has been treated in the debates upon it as nonpartisan, and I am glad of it. It enables me to speak with freedom as to my own party's action upon railway rate legislation without having the hypocritical pretense made that it disturbs party harmony or in any way breaks in on the line of party allegiance. What the people of Florida want, what the people of the Third Congressional district in that State want, is for the American Congress to write into the laws of this land provisions that will entirely guard them against unreasonable and unjust railway rate charges and against every device known to railway cunning and railway ingenuity to accomplish that result. Unless the Congress yields that much, then the people of Florida have not obtained on the statute books of the United States that which they in part, at least, demand. It is with the voice and sentiment of my people, so far as I represent them upon this important occasion, that I propose to submit some reflections upon a yet unsettled problem. And I desire to say to my party colleagues, in all candor and in all sincerity, coming from a loyal Democratic constituency, that our people would have more pleasure in the criticisms, coming from my party side, of a Republican President upon the railway rate question if their official action on the floor of this House had one year ago measured up to the length of his recommendations to the Fifty-eighth Congress.

I say frankly that I speak in protest here against any shortcomings on the part of the Democracy of the House of Representatives, as well as upon the part of the Republicans, upon this great national nonpartisan question.

Mr. Chairman, it appears, out of a long-continued debate, that there are two questions of primary importance in the consideration of this great question. The controversy will never be ended, the subject of this debate will never be concluded, until these two questions are settled properly. As long as the American Congress leaves in the hands of the railroads the fundamental right of rate making, as long as the people of this country, through their legislative body, leave in the hands of the railroads the power to fix their own valuations of their own property, upon which just and reasonable rates are sought to be levied—as long as these two great powers are left in the hands of the railroads, then I pronounce the Hepburn bill, with all the remedial amendments impressed upon it by the Senate, as a mere delusion and a snare.

It is not creditable to the American Congress that they failed to write into the laws of the land those wise and just provisions which their own expert governmental agencies advised them to do. And I say the American Congress for ten years has been wisely and properly advised by their own Interstate Commerce Commission, and by the Industrial Commission, which was composed of members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate and of ten prominent business men of the country. The members of this House and of the Senate have been properly advised by those voluminous and long-extended reports for years past of the great evils done to the shippers of this country and to the producers and the consumers by railway extortion. And the American Congress has flouted those reports—and I use the word advisedly. Whose opinion is to control in framing legislation upon this subject? Not mine, particularly; not yours, particularly; not the opinions of Democrats, particularly; not the opinions of Republicans, particularly. If this Congress does properly it will go to those reports and find out from them exactly wherein the shippers and producers and consumers in this country are injured by railway extortion. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to take up, first, the great subject of classification. When the Hepburn bill becomes a law without granting to the Interstate Commerce Commission full power and control over the great classification of freight, a great wrong and a great injury will have been done to the American producers, the American shippers, and the American consumers.

In not giving this power in the Hepburn bill to the Interstate Commerce Commission the members of Congress have thrown aside the report of the Industrial Commission made to the Fifty-seventh Congress, and have flouted and turned down the reports made to the Senate and the House of Representatives by their own governmental expert agents, the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I will discuss, first, the classification of freight rates. The classification of freight rates is the true rate-making power itself in another form. The House of Representatives is about to pass a bill which leaves this potent weapon of harm still unsheathed in the hands of the railroad companies. Mr. Chairman, if the American public fully understood these wise recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the report of the Industrial Commission upon this subject of classification, and if they believed them, there are not many men on the floor of this House who could secure their election to the Sixtieth Congress unless they would put themselves in accord with them. I wish, first, to read a letter that I addressed to the railroad commission in the State of Nebraska. A similar letter, exact in terms, was addressed by me to the railroad commissions in every other State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1906.

PRESIDENT RAILROAD COMMISSION,
Lincoln, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: Can you send me a copy of your State railroad commission law? If so, I would be greatly pleased if you would send same to me at once. I thank you in advance now for your courtesy.

Will you also write me a short letter stating whether your commission has the power to make a change in classification of freight rates, and to what extent? Also your opinion as to the value of this power lodged in your State commission and in the National Commission.

I am very anxious, indeed, speaking for the shippers in the Third Congressional district of Florida, to see the Interstate Commerce Commission have this power over classification, at least over items and groups, as recommended by the Industrial Commission to the Fifty-seventh Congress. It seems to me that the Hepburn bill is very defective in not having this power lodged in the Commission.

It leaves it in the power of railroad companies to raise their rates at will through the medium of change of classification of rates. Your prompt reply, with a copy of your State railroad commission law, and your opinion in this matter will be greatly appreciated by me.

Very sincerely, yours,

W. B. LAMAR,
Member of Congress, Third District, Florida.

In reply, written on the back of my letter which was returned to me are the words, "No railroad commission in this State."

I am not astonished that William Jennings Bryan was beaten in his own State in the election for President of the United States when the Republican party had left in the hands of the railroads the power to control the business there without a State railroad commission. A great producing, a great consuming, and a great shipping State, without any protection from railway discrimination and railway extortion inside the borders of that State. It is almost impossible to beat the Republican party and its allies—the railroads.

Mr. Chairman, before reading the replies I received from some of the railroad commissioners, or their secretaries, let me very briefly call the attention of this House to the danger of leaving in the hands of the railroads this vital power to them for raising rates, this injurious power to ourselves and our constituents, this power over classification of freight. I shall quote in part from the report of the Industrial Commission made to the Fifty-seventh Congress five years ago:

FREIGHT CLASSIFICATION.

Attention has been directed to the significance and importance of freight classification of late, by reason of the use made of it in the recent notable advances of freight rates throughout the country. Shippers have awakened to the fact that classification is a factor of primary importance in the making of freight rates. From a public point of view, the topic is important because the supervision or control of classification apparently was not contemplated by the original act to regulate commerce. The anomalous situation is presented, therefore, of a grant of power intended to prevent discrimination in freight rates, while at the same time provision for control over an important element in such rate making was entirely omitted.

And again:

Without recommending arbitrarily the necessity for a uniform classification of freight in the United States, it seems that under the complicated system which exists at the present time there ought to be some public supervision and control. There is absolutely none at present, as will be shown in detail in a subsequent chapter dealing with the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The mere adoption of a uniform classification, as proposed in the Cullom bill, can accomplish very little, unless with this there be coupled the proper legislation for the enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in respect to the control of rates.

To show how railroads use the device of "classification" to raise rates I submit this further extract from the report of the Industrial Commission:

THE GENERAL FREIGHT RATE ADVANCES BY MEANS OF CLASSIFICATION CHANGES.

The long-continued and steady decline of freight rates since the civil war has given way in 1900 to a marked advance in the published rates. No similar attempt, with the exception, perhaps, of the year 1894, has been made to arrest, by concerted action of all the roads of the country, this progressive decline, due to a considerable degree, as it has appeared, to competition between the railroads themselves. The peculiarity of these advances of 1900 is that they have been made, not by direct changes of tariffs, but by modification of the freight classifications. Merchandise, as is well known, is thrown into various classes according to its value, bulk, risk, etc., and the charges are graded accordingly. Consequently the transfer of a particular commodity from one class to another may operate materially to increase the rate of freight charge. Thus, for instance, the freight rate from New York to Atlanta by any all-rail line is fixed by common agreement at $1.14 per 100 pounds.

The rate on second class is 98, on third class 86, on fourth class 73, etc. It is apparent that if goods—axes, for example—which were formerly fourth class are by a change in classification made third class, this operates to increase the rates between these points specified from 73 to 86 cents. Moreover, since these classifications, as will be shown later in this report, are agreed upon by all railroads operating within each specified territory, a change of classification operates simultaneously to increase rates throughout the entire section. The same result may be attained also by changing classification according as the goods are shipped in carloads or less than carload lots. Thus, if a commodity was formerly classified as fourth class when shipped in carloads and as third when in less than carload lots, if the distinction between these two classes of shipment be removed and all are classified as third, whether in large or small quantity, this likewise results in an increase of the freight rate to the large shipper by the difference in the rate between third and fourth class. Or, again, as will be shown, certain commodities are sometimes exempted from classification by a special or "commodity" rate, as it is called. This commodity rate is usually very much below the rate for classified merchandise. Thus corn by the Official Classification is sixth class, and the rate from Chicago to New York for that class is 25 cents. If, however, corn actually moves under a commodity rate of 17½ cents per 100 pounds, the cancellation of the commodity rate immediately operates to put corn in class 6, thereby raising the rate to 25 cents.

Among the general recommendations of the Industrial Commission was the following one:

(f) For a specific grant of power to the Interstate Commerce Commission over classification, both as to items and grouping.

Coupled with this, however, we dissent from the section of the so-called "Cullom bill" requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission within a certain period to promulgate a uniform classification for the United States. This is not intended to detract from the importance or desirability of greater uniformity in classification, but action to this end should be taken by the carriers on their own initiative.

In aid of this contention I offer an extract of a letter from Hon. R. Hudson Burr, a member of the Florida State railroad commission, with reference to the pending bill:

I see that it gives no supervision whatever over the classification. While this bill may prevent the railroads from raising or lowering a rate or freight tariff, it will amount to very little if the railroads are to be the sole judges of classification, for that has always been the favorite instrument in their hands for tampering with rates. It is possible to change whole tariffs almost by use of the classification, and it is done.

For instance, the Florida railroad commission when it first organized adopted what was known as "Southern Classification No. 25" as the Florida classification. In about two years' time the southern classification had been changed until something like 500 articles in classification No. 25 had been raised, and at that time the railroad commission revised the Florida classification, placing back the articles thus raised by the railroads, and adopted what was known as the "Florida Classification No. 1," and now we find that again each year, when the traffic managers have met for the purpose of going over these matters, they have raised items in the southern classification until it differs materially from our classification. If they used the Florida classification on interstate shipments into Florida, it would not affect us so badly; but where the southern classification is higher they use it, and if in a remote case an item should be higher in the Florida classification they would use that. In other words, they use that which results in the highest rate.

It seems to me that it would be a farce to pass a bill enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission in which they were given the right, where complaint is made of the unreasonableness of a rate, and after hearing, etc., to substitute in lieu thereof a just and reasonable rate to leave the classification entirely in the hands of the railroad people. The Commission should have supervision of the classification to the same extent that they are given supervision over the rate; that is, where an article is classed in a manner to make it unreasonable and unjust that upon complaint, investigation, and hearing the Commission should have the right, if found to be as complained of, to substitute in lieu thereof a reasonable and just classification of the article or articles complained of.

When the Hepburn rate bill was being considered in this House some weeks ago I used the following language:

I shall offer an amendment at the proper time giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority and power over items and grouping, in order that the Commission shall have some disposition over classifications of freight, in this bill, as follows:

"On page 10, section 4, line 15, after the word 'regulations,' insert the words 'or classifications;' and after the word 'regulation,' in line 23, insert the words 'or classification;' and on page 11, line 5, after the word 'regulation,' insert the words 'or classification.'"

I did offer that amendment to the Hepburn rate bill on this floor, and Democrats and Republicans united to vote it down.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman?

Mr. LAMAR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will recollect that less than a week ago the Supreme Court of the United States decided what is known as the "Hay case," in which they decided that the railroad, by a mere change of classification, could immensely increase the rate of freight on hay; and the Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the lower court, saying that the Commission had no such power to fix the rate and that the railroads could do it at will.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, I make this address with a view of calling the attention of this House, without regard to party, to what I regard as the laches of this House and the laches of the body at the north end of this Capitol.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there has been introduced into this House a bill by the gentleman from Louisiana, who represented the views, and it was drawn by him and other minority Members united expressly to give the Commission power to change the classification on rates.

Mr. LAMAR. I am making my remarks perfectly impersonal and addressing them to the Members of this body without regard to party. I am asking the attention of the committee to the fact that in legislating against railroad extortion we have left one of the most vital powers to extort still in the hands of the railroads, and flatter ourselves that we have taken this power from them in passing the Hepburn bill. The Hepburn bill permits the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce only one unjust and unreasonable railroad rate at a time, and that can not be done by the Commission except when some one makes a complaint. It leaves the railroads with the power still to raise a thousand rates in a night by the covert and fraudulent device of a change in classification of freight. Commissioner Burr, of Florida, is correct when he characterizes the Hepburn rate bill as a "farce" in this respect.

I protest in advance against the passage of that bill, although I shall vote for it as the best that I can get at this session. I protest against it upon the very ground that it does not embrace in its terms the elimination of this dangerous and potent power for harm, the power of classification enjoyed by the railroads at the present time, and which will be enjoyed after the passage of the Hepburn bill, and I say it is not creditable to the American Congress that they leave the railroads in possession of that power.

I am not attempting to inflict my individual opinions upon this House. No Member will be able to rise and say, "You are quite vain in suggesting to me that I vote your way." Ah, no; I do not propose to do that. I propose to face the Members of this House, regardless of party, with those high recommendations from expert governmental agents, which they are bound to take or bound to reject, and the country will conclude that when they reject them the rejection must have proceeded with the idea that the governmental experts were wrong, and the country will never indorse that position—the position that has already been taken by this House.

I desire now to call attention to the fact that at the very time the Hepburn rate bill was being debated, there met in this city on April 2, 1906, the National Association of Railway Commissioners, composed of representatives from the different State railroad commissions, to consider this great railroad rate question. And upon this very point of classification I call attention to the resolutions adopted by that association:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that Congress enact a law requiring the railroads engaged in interstate commerce throughout the United States to, within two years after the passage of such act, prepare and adopt a uniform classification of freight articles; and in case they failed to do so within the time required that the Interstate Commerce Commission at once proceed to make such classification and when so made by such Commission the same shall be the legal classification for interstate shipments.

That the secretary forward a copy of this report to the Senate and House of Representatives, and call their attention to the former reports of this association on this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the railroad commissioners for those words, "former reports." This House of Representatives should reflect upon those words, and, more than all else, should profit by them.

Now, sir, let me call the attention of the House to some of the letters that I received in reply to my letters. I have selected the letters which I am about to read because they come from the States which are represented by members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House. I have letters from other States, but I desire to quote from these letters at present, so that at the next session the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may not fail to report an amendment to the Hepburn bill upon this subject. First, I quote from a letter from the State of Louisiana, represented on that committee by Mr. DAVEY:

This commission has and exercises the power to make and change classifications and rates whenever it may appear necessary. The opinion of this commission is that the power to fix reasonable rates is absolutely essential to the usefulness of a State commission and that this is also true of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

But Mr. DAVEY is a member of the committee that did not report a provision covering "classification" in the Hepburn bill.

I have mislaid the report from the State of Alabama, and I have forgotten exactly the terms used by the Alabama commission, but I have their letter, and I say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], who is a member of that committee, that a great and important political election is now proceeding in the State of Alabama, turning upon the very question as to whether the railroads in that State shall be radically controlled, if anybody likes that term; and it is a known and conceded fact that the president of the present State railroad commission will be the governor of Alabama, and I predict that the legislature elected in accordance with his views on this subject will pass a statute not only giving original rate-making power to the commission, but will include also this power over classification.

From the State of Georgia, the State of my friend Mr. BARTLETT, I have the following:

With reference to the power of this commission in making changes in classification of freight rates, I beg to advise that the board has the power so to do, and in the opinion of the commission this authority is very essential to the regulation of railroads and should be vested in the national Commission as well as the State.

That is from the State of Georgia. Now, from the great State of Texas, represented on the same committee having charge of railway rate legislation:

I do not care to enter into a general discussion of the rate bill now pending in Congress. I think the general public sorely needs some relief from the power which the railroads now exercise in the matter of fixing rates. They can lower or raise them, and by manipulations discriminate in favor of persons and places. I must say, however, that if the Hepburn bill does not contemplate some protection to the public from an increase in rates by change in classification, that it falls short of what the public needs.

That is from the great State of Texas. Here is a letter from the State of Iowa, the home of the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. HEPBURN]:

Under this law this board is empowered to fix classification as well as rates.

Here is a letter from the State of Ohio, represented by another member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee [Mr. KENNEDY]:

Section 4, paragraph A, provides: "No change shall hereafter be made in any schedule, including schedule of joint rates, or in any classification, except upon ten days' notice to the commission." Section 7: "The classification of freight in the State shall be uniform on all railroads." It is my opinion that the sections above referred to bind the question of classification in such a manner that it will be almost impossible for the railroads to raise their rates through that medium.

Mr. Chairman, here is a letter from the State of Minnesota, which is represented by another member on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

All rates can be raised or lowered, as the case may be, by changes in these classifications, and our commission is of the opinion that by lodging the power with the State or national commission, the abuse of indiscriminately raising or lowering the rate by this manner could be obviated.

Now, sir, here is a letter from the Washington railroad commission, which State has another member on that committee:

This commission has full authority in the matter of the classification and establishment of freight rates. The Washington law, in fact, is one of the most comprehensive commission laws enacted in any of the States, and clothes the commission with practically all the authority that could be desired, especially on the rate question.

Here, sir, is a letter from the secretary of the commission in the State of South Dakota, which has another member on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee:

This latter power is—

He is writing about the classification of freight—

I assume, as necessary as the power to fix rates; indeed, the one is so intimately associated with the other that the power to fix rates without the power of classification would, in many instances, be a dead letter.

Mr. Chairman, here is a letter from the State of Illinois, represented on the same committee by the Hon. JAMES R. MANN, whom I sincerely hope will be returned to this House (if we must have a Republican from his district), for I have been on the committee with him and can bear testimony to his faithfulness to his duty and earnestness and zeal in behalf of legislation; but, sir, I can not agree with him upon this question and some others. It is an honest difference between us, and it is a difference that must be fought out on the floor of the House without regard to party by individual views of what the law should be. The letter is as follows:

Answering your inquiry, this commission have authority under the statute to make a "reasonable maximum rate of charges for the transportation of passengers and freights and cars upon all of the railroads operating in the State of Illinois." This has been taken by the commission to include authority for a classification of freights, which, as a classification materially affects the rate, they have done and have issued a classification and schedule of rates for all classes of freight and cars.

I have not read the Hepburn bill in full, and do not know just exactly what power it proposes to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, if they are to have the power to make a rate it would seem to me logical that they should also have the power to make a classification also.

Here is a letter from the State of Pennsylvania. Listen. I started to say, "The Lord have mercy on the State of Pennsylvania," but it is a great State, and it may be that it can take care of itself. This letter says:

The law governing railroads in this State is very meager, and the secretary of internal affairs has no control in regard to the fixing of railroad rates, etc.

Now, just a word of advice to the Members from Pennsylvania. Pass, as soon as possible, a law controlling your State rates. Lend me your votes and voices to enact this classification power into a future bill, and if we can not forgive the horrible railroad disclosures now occurring in your State, we will promise to forget them as soon as it is possible to do so. [Laughter.]

Here is a letter from the State of Wisconsin. It has a Member on the same committee:

Our commission has power to change either rates or classification on complaint of any shipper, and also has power to investigate any particular rate on its own motion and make an order reducing the same if found to be unreasonable.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LAMAR. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I have the curiosity to know why it has not been proposed to regulate through the Hepburn bill this classification. I would like to ask whether the gentleman or any of his colleagues on the Democratic side of the House have advocated this heretofore when the bill was under the control of the House?

Mr. LAMAR. That is a proper question. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio rises in his place and proposes a proper inquiry. It is an inquiry that is a proper one to address to me when I am addressing the House. Let me say in reply that when I had the honor to be a member of that committee a year ago I reported in an informal manner to this House—the best I could do at that time—the Hearst bill, a bill that carried far more remedial legislation in its terms than the Hepburn bill does of this date, and it carried the power over classification of freight rates. Lately in this House I offered an amendment to the Hepburn bill, giving this power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Democrats and Republicans voted it down.

I am glad the gentleman from Ohio asked the question for another reason.

This question is a nonpartisan one. We may meet it in this forum as legislators, be we right or be we wrong. I have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a late date before me in which I addressed an inquiry to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] upon certain points of agreement or difference in his committee. In the discussion that ensued upon my question and that of other Members he used this language:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like just a few moments to refer to the question of classification. I am quite sure I am correct when I say that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee were practically agreed that at this time it was best to leave out of the bill the power and jurisdiction of the Commission regulating classification.

Again:

It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, far best to let that for the present stand as it is, leaving out classification.

Again:

We all agree on that question; that is my recollection.

Again:

There is no great complaint about classification, as I am informed. Indeed, the committee has heard very little of it, and I pass it, Mr. Chairman, as a fit subject for other and future legislation.

Why, Mr. Chairman, where have been the ears of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON]? Has he ever heard the reports, figuratively speaking, rendered for years past by the governmental experts in this country, appointed by the Government itself, to take this very testimony as to what legislation Congress shall enact? I refer to the Interstate Commerce Commission reports. Has he ever read the report I quoted from above, the report of the Industrial Commission, made up of Senators and Members of this House and of representatives of great business interests of this country, who for a long period of time sat patiently, learnedly, honestly, and took testimony on this great transportation question? Has he ever read that report—he a member of one of the highest committees in this body, charged with the duty of framing legislation on this great subject that has occupied the minds of the American people for a year and a half, almost to the exclusion of any other great question? And then he, in the RECORD here at this session of Congress, says that the committee has heard very little complaint about classification.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not informed himself. That is all. In addition to all this, the Interstate Commerce Commission has repeatedly recommended that authority be given it by law over this subject of classification of freight. As far back as 1897 the Commission discusses this important subject on pages 62 to 71, inclusive, in their eleventh annual report. I quote the conclusion of their remarks:

These considerations of the necessity for reform in this regard, the universal demand for a uniform classification, the ten years of appeal to the carriers, by the Commission and by Congress, to adopt a consolidated and single system for the whole country, the "representations" by the carriers themselves, their former efforts to that end, the energy at one time displayed by them, and the apparent apathy that marks their attitude toward the subject to-day, all lead the Commission to the renewed recommendation that Congress provide for such uniformity by prompt and appropriate legislation. Carriers subject to the act should be required within a specified time, not longer than one year, to prepare, publish, and file with the Commission a uniform classification of freight as the basis of rates for the transportation of property in the United States; and the Commission should be authorized and directed, upon investigation from time to time, to make such amendments as may appear to be reasonable and necessary. In case the railroads refuse or neglect within the time specified to comply with this direction, the Commission should be authorized and required to prepare such classification, the adoption of which by all carriers subject to regulation shall be made compulsory by suitable penalty. In view of the continued nonaction of the carriers, and the action already had in Congress, it might be the wiser course to pass the bill now pending in the Senate.

And the bill drawn lately, at the request of the Senate committee by the Interstate Commerce Commission, contemplated this power over classification to be vested in it, as in section 6 in the printed bill, at the bottom of page 10, occurs this language:

The Commission may determine and prescribe the form, subjects to be contained in, and arrangement of the tariffs required to be published and filed, as aforesaid, and may change such form, subjects, or arrangement thereof from time to time as shall be found expedient.

But the Senate failed to impress that feature of classification upon the Hepburn bill. Other States besides those from which I read letters have vested their State railroad commissions with power over classification of freight. Virginia, Arkansas, North Carolina, Missouri, and Mississippi have each conferred this power upon their State railroad commissions. The letter from the president of the Mississippi railroad commission is as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., April 9, 1906.

Hon W. B. LAMAR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor April 2, beg to advise that I am sending you, under separate cover, copy of Mississippi railroad commissioners' tenth biennial report, which will give you the information you ask for as to our rates and classification.

My observation is that the power lodged in the commission (and the Mississippi railroad commission is vested with such power under the laws of the State) to change or alter classification of freight rates between all points in said State is a wise provision. I agree with you that the Hepburn bill is defective in not having the power lodged in the Interstate Commission, for, as suggested by you, it leaves it in the power of the railroad company (without this provision) to raise rates at will through the medium of change of classification.

Yours, very truly,

S. D. MCNAIR, President.

These letters from these States show that the very States represented by these gentlemen on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and other States also, have this power over classification, and the writers almost unanimously concur that it is a just, a wise power, and a great many of them give expression to the view that not only should it be in State legislation, but also in national legislation. Mr. Chairman, I ask why the members of that committee and the Members of this House have not cooperated in putting this vast power for harm out of the possession of the railways of this country? I say that, regardless of party, there is a line of cleavage in this House, broad and deep and strong; and, without impugning the honesty of any man, I say that this House, regardless of party, is divided upon this great question upon the lines of "conservatism" and "radicalism." Many gentlemen have educated themselves to believe in the years past, many of them have read newspapers that taught the doctrine, many of them have had friendships of public men who did not believe that way, that to take out of the hands of railways any control over their property was radical, unjust, socialistic, and almost anarchistic legislation. That fundamental misleading thought in the American mind to-day operates upon Members of this House and of the Senate of the United States to restrain them from going up to the point where their own paid, highly expert governmental agents urge them to go by reports, and repeated reports, covering a long term of years. That is the reason. I quote now from the remarks lately made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] to illustrate the conservative and radical tendencies in opinion in this House. In answer to a question put by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who asked him why the imprisonment penalty did not get into the Hepburn law, he replied:

All I can say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is that I am not advocating excessive fines or penalties.

The House of Representatives failed to put this feature in the Hepburn bill, a feature one would think that everybody was in favor of. Now, I will do the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] the justice to say that further on in his speech he said he was sorry and regretted the elimination of the penalty clause in the act passed some years ago and known as the Elkins law, but I say that that language is plain, palpable, and not to be misunderstood, that at the moment when he joined in reporting the Hepburn bill to this House he did not believe in excessive fines and penalties and classed among such the imprisonment feature. In other words, he did not believe in the feature of criminal punishment to reach the railway officers if they break the law, which has been put in that bill, remedially put there by the Senate of the United States. Judge RICHARDSON is now a member of the conferees appointed by the Speaker of this House to confer with those of the Senate, and he will have to take that amendment or reject it. Which will he do? That, Mr. Chairman, illustrates again the cleavage and divergence between Members on the floor of this House on this important subject.

A year ago I had the honor to report informally to this House a bill which I still believe is the best bill that ever appeared in the American Congress on this subject, a bill that contained this imprisonment feature, and that bill was introduced into this House by the distinguished Representative from New York, WILLIAM R. HEARST, in February, 1904. It is a tribute to that great bill, it is a tribute to its wise provisions, it is a tribute to Mr. HEARST, that this House finally, in enacting the Hepburn bill, and the United States Senate in impressing remedial amendments upon it, have largely followed either the recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Industrial Commission, or they have gotten a great many of their ideas bodily out of the Hearst bill. It is very probable that Mr. HEARST got his knowledge of the law and his remedial measures out of those two great sources of information, and very justly so, but he is entitled to the highest credit before the American people. Two years ago, eight months before the President of the United States sent his memorable message to Congress, in December, 1904, Mr. HEARST proposed in his bill nearly all of the remedial features that are now being enacted into law by the joint wisdom of this House and the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, I now pass to another question: This House and the Senate must limit the right of railways to raise their rates at will, or the Hepburn bill, with all due respect to the name impressed upon it, with all due respect to the law body that adopted it, will still be a delusion and a snare to the American consumer, the American producer, and the American shipper. They must amend that bill not only as to classification, which is largely a fraudulent device to raise rates, they must not only put the power of classification in that bill, but they must, further, enact into that bill another amendment, viz, that no railroad company shall raise an existing rate of charge without that proposed increase of rate being submitted in advance to the judgment of the Interstate Commission, with the power to approve or reject it.

That amendment is vital. Without it this legislation, this Hepburn bill, is in a large degree a mockery. The weakness of the bill in leaving this amendment out is demonstrated by the action of the railroads in my State—Florida—twelve or fifteen years ago. The railroads had been carrying oranges from Florida to New York at 30 cents per box. But the railroads could not restrain their itching palms to get hold of more than they were warranted in getting, and in a night, without giving anybody notice, they raised the rate of carrying that fruit to market from 30 cents to 40 cents a box, an unjust, unreasonable, extortionate raise in price of 33⅓ per cent. I quote again from the report of the Industrial Commission, which treats of this iniquity and suggests the remedy that I stated above, and which I have taken from their report and from the Hearst bill, that also contained it:

The entire inadequacy of making rate regulation dependent upon the mere determination of rates as applied in the past without reference to the rates which shall prevail in the future is apparent on all sides. More than this, all remedy for the parties who have borne the burden of an unreasonable rate would seem to have been removed. This has been clearly described in the report of the Commission for 1897. It may be illustrated by the example of rates upon oranges. In 1890 there was a sudden advance on rates from Florida to New York from 30 to 40 cents. The Commission after an investigation ordered that the rate be reduced to 35 cents. As a matter of fact, how could this action redress grievances of those who had already paid 40 cents per box?

It was difficult, in the first place, to discover who bore the burden of the unreasonable charge; and, in the second place, it was certain that some of those who suffered could not legally sue in court. The actual shipper, who alone could sue for repayment of unreasonable charges, was a middleman, who recouped himself in any event, either from the grower, the consumer, or both. He lost nothing by reason of the unreasonable rate. As a matter of fact, not any single individual, but the locality had been mulcted by 5 cents per 100 pounds, supposing that a rate of 40 cents was unreasonable. Experience shows that almost no shippers or other parties injured actually attempt to secure the restitution of moneys already paid for unreasonable charges. In only 5 out of 225 cases down to 1897 was a rebate actually sought, and in those cases $100 was the maximum sought to be recovered. As a matter of fact, the damage inflicted by the existence of such an unreasonable rate could not be measured by hundreds or perhaps by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The bearing of this citation is to show that any effectual protection to the shipper must proceed from adjudication of the reasonableness of rates before, and not after, they have been paid—that is to say, in advance of their exaction by the carrier. Power to pass upon the reasonableness of such rates prior to their enforcement, as a consequence, constitutes practically the only safeguard which the shipping public may enjoy.

The Congress must protect the shippers, the consumers, and the producers against two outrageous forms of robbery, one being the direct raise of the rate, without any limitation upon it except the right to sue and have it cut down. The other is, you must not leave in the hands of the railroads the power to swindle the people under the devious, evasive, and fraudulent device of classification. The Congress will not do it, unless it desires to make itself a party to the extortion.

I offered the following amendment to the Hepburn rate bill recently, to prevent this evil, and Democrats united with Republicans to vote it down. The amendment is as follows:

That when any notice of advance in rates, fares, or charges shall be filed with the Commission, the said Commission shall have authority to inquire into the lawfulness of such advance and make orders in respect thereof to the same effect as if such advanced rate, fare, or charge were actually in force. The provisions of this section shall also apply to notice of any change in classification of freight or other regulations affecting rates.

I shall address myself, in conclusion, to the fraudulent overcapitalization of the railroads in the United States, and I will endeavor to show the essential relation between the earnings of the railroads and their capitalization. The higher the capitalization, then, the higher the rates. The total value of all railroads in the United States is estimated by the highest authorities to be $12,599,990,258, more than $12,000,000,000; and the testimony of the best informed writers and statisticians estimate that more than one-half of this great sum is mere "wind and water." They estimate that $7,000,000,000 of this gigantic value is a pure cheat and fraud, on which the American people pay annually in extortion, under the guise of railway rate charges, the great sum of $350,000,000.

I shall quote from the report of the Industrial Commission, made to the Fifty-seventh Congress, and will now give the testimony, contained in that report, of Professor Parsons, an expert judge in this matter, viz:

The prevalence of water in the railroad system is so well known that it is not necessary to do more than touch upon the matter. Vanderbilt set the pace in consolidating the eleven roads between Albany and Buffalo and increased the capitalization by nearly $9,000,000 in doing it, then added 50 per cent to the stock capitalization of the Hudson road, of which he was president; then extending his control over the Central and adopting the same tactics there he added 80 per cent to the New York Central; then he consolidated the two roads, and in doing it inflated the Central 27 per cent more and the Hudson 85 per cent; so that in the four years from 1866 to 1870 he brought the capitalization up from $54,000,000, which was a little more than the total cost on the books of the company—about $4,000,000 more—to $103,000,000. The total cost on the books in 1870 was under $70,000 per mile, while under his capitalization it was $122,000 per mile.

That example has been followed to a great extent all over the country, so that our railroad capitalization is now about half water, or water and wind. The figures of construction and equipment cost given in Poor's Manual from time to time indicate that the railroads of the United States are capitalized at about double what they could be built and equipped for at the present time.

Mr. Parsons further stated that the total capitalization was a little over $60,000 a mile, and that the actual value, according to Poor's figures as to the cost of reproduction, would be under $30,000 a mile. (See Report of Industrial Commission, Vol. IX, pp. 154 and 155.)

On pages 405–407 of Volume XIX of the Industrial Commission's report the following appears:

Methods of inflating capitalization are various. Formerly sheer fraud was often practiced in issuing stock for speculative purposes. Between 1868 and 1872, for example, the share capital of the Erie road was increased from $17,000,000 to $78,000,000 for the purpose of manipulating the market. This action led the board of the New York Stock Exchange in 1869 to refuse to quote the Erie shares. Another fraudulent device consisted in paying excessive sums to dummy construction companies composed of members of the railroad company and their friends. For instance, the original Southern Pacific road cost actually only $6,500,000; altogether it is a matter of record that $15,000,000 was paid a construction company, and the bankers' syndicate which financed the road received $40,000,000 in securities, or an average of $6 in bonds and stock for each dollar of actual cost. The same thing happened in connection with the Pacific roads. It was also not uncommon for directors of railroad companies to purchase other railroad properties and then sell them to their own company at excessive prices. Again, stock has in many instances been given away by railroad companies simply as a bonus to bait purchasers of the bonds which the concerns were trying to float. It is well known that the New York Central, Erie, Reading, St. Paul, Chicago and Northwestern gave away in this manner a portion of their earlier stock issues. These flagrant methods of stock watering have been largely discontinued during recent years.

The principal methods of stock watering still employed are the following:

1. The commonest is the payment of so-called "stock dividends" to shareholders. These consist either of an outright bonus of new shares of stocks or bonds or, in a mitigated form, of stocks sold below par or at less than market quotations. Examples are the 80 per cent stock dividend of the New York Central, in 1868; the Reading scrip dividends, between the years 1871 and 1876; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and Atchison stock dividends of 20 per cent and 50 per cent, respectively, in 1880 and 1881, and the famous Boston and Albany distribution of State stock in 1882.

2. Consolidation of railroad properties offers opportunities to increase capital surreptitiously in various ways: (a) One is through the issue of new stock to defray the entire expenses of betterment of the operating plant. (b) Sometimes, again, the constituent companies are gerrymandered so that the successful concerns with surplus earnings are combined with roads less favorably situated, thus making it possible to distribute earnings at a comparatively low dividend rate. (c) The third device connected with consolidation consists in substituting a high-grade for a low-grade security. A weak company, whose stock is quoted, say, at 50, may be merged in a second corporation whose stock stands at 100. The latter may then issue new stock worth $100 in exchange for the $50 stock, share for share.

3. A third method is the substitution of stock issues for funded debt. It has the advantage of giving great elasticity to future dividend possibilities. The substitution of 8 per cent stock for 4 per cent bonds facilitates the absorption of increasing earnings in the future. The stocks also permit of cessation of dividends during periods of depression. The substitution of stock for bonds in this way is not, however, so harmful to the public interest, provided the stock issues are subject to control by State commissions.

4. Another expedient for increasing capitalization is the funding of contingent liabilities. Large amounts of such liabilities, in the form of bills payable, wages and salaries due, and the like, may be covered by issues of interest-bearing scrip. This is unquestionably bad financiering, as floating debts should, in general, be provided for out of earnings.

An excellent illustration of inflation of capitalization is furnished by the recent reorganization of the Chicago and Alton Railway Company. The old Alton management was extremely conservative. The stock had never been watered, and represented, before the recent deal, less than the probable cost of duplication. The company was capitalized at about $30,000,000, including $22,000,000 of stock and about $8,000,000 of bonds. It had a net earning capacity of $2,900,000 a year, paying regular dividends of 7 or 8 per cent on its common stock. In 1899 the road was bought by a syndicate, which paid $175 a share for the common stock and $200 a share for the preferred stock, making a total cost to the purchaser of $40,000,000 for the $22,000,000 of stock. The road was recapitalized at $94,000,000, or $54,000,000 of bonds and $40,000,000 of stock. The new bonds were floated at 3½ per cent. The fixed charges of the road as reorganized amount to $1,963,000 per year. On the basis of the former earning capacity of the road, which averaged considerably more than $3,000 net per mile, it is estimated that the company will have no difficulty in earning its fixed charges and paying a dividend on the preferred stock. The increase of capitalization in this case is defended on the ground that the road will not have to earn any more than formerly in order to pay interest and dividends on the new capital. It seems clear, however, that the doubling of the capital stock and the increasing of the bonded debt nearly sevenfold must impose a burden upon the rates that will tend to prevent any reduction which might otherwise naturally take place and afford a convenient reason for refusing to advance wages.

In the recent case, Northern Securities Company v. United States (193 U. S., 197), Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, stated that the capital stock of the Northern Securities Company, $400,000,000, which was to be issued to purchase the capital stock of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern companies, was about $122,000,000 greater than the combined capital stock of the latter two companies.

The obvious purpose of increasing fraudulently railroad values, called "overcapitalization," is to sell on the market this fraudulent stock and bonds to purchasers, and then by increasing railway rates to earn sufficient money to pay dividends and interest on this fraudulent stock and bonds.

I append to my remarks a letter of Mr. William D. Marks, a high authority upon this subject, to show that $7,000,000,000 of the $12,599,990,258 railway values in the United States is an absolute and a palpable fraud. At 5 per cent interest this fraudulent $7,000,000,000 takes out of the pockets of the American people $350,000,000 each year, unjustly, wrongfully, and fraudulently. Will the Congress always continue to allow the railways to so unjustly tax the people, and do so under the apparent forms of law at that? Senator LA FOLLETTE lately proposed an amendment in the United States Senate to correct this great evil, and it was voted down, all the Democrats, I believe, voting for the amendment. I append his amendment in full at the conclusion of my remarks as a part thereof.

If the fraudulent value of railway property could be ascertained and fixed by law, then railway rates of charges could be fixed upon the honest value of such property, and it is obvious that such rates so based would be much lower than existing railway rates.

What does the Congress intend to do about this great question? What does the Congress want to do? Are we here to make party capital? Are we here to deploy and march forward and back again, in flank and side movements, merely to trip up somebody? That, sir, will do on some subjects. I am willing, sir, to join hands with the Democrats whenever they want to do a little filibustering in this House, whenever they want to take tactical advantage and put "our friends the enemy" in a hole, as it were, upon some subject of party dispute; but upon this vital question of rate making, upon this great question of transportation taxation, I say that my party and the other party must submit to the criticism that will fall upon them if they do not come out in the open and advocate this legislation, which has almost been forced upon them by the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the report of the Industrial Commission. Either those highly expert Governmental agencies are right or this House is right. I believe, sir, that those great bodies are correct, and that the Senate and this House are wrong.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing that I enjoy more than a legitimate criticism of a Republican. If there is anything in the world I am opposed to in my whole political life, speaking in a party sense, it is Republicans and the Republican party. It would do me more good than I can express to see them beaten at the polls next November. I would like to see them routed, horse, foot, and dragoons, at the polls in 1908, but I warn my party colleagues that they will never defeat the Republican party in this nation and hold them defeated except by convincing the country that upon these great remedial questions legislation can be more safely turned over to them than to the Republicans. No factious party criticism on the floor of this House will avail with the 80,000,000 intelligent American citizens. There will be no responsive echo from the States that control the destinies of this country by majorities in the electoral colleges except in response to the Democratic showing made on the floor of these two Houses that the Democratic party, by virtue of honesty, intelligence, and of courage, can be more safely intrusted with political power than the Republican party. The election two years ago ought to be a warning to the Democratic party in this country. Bryan, the radical, defeated twice at the polls by about a half million votes each time; Parker, "the sane and safe" Democrat, was beaten by more than two million plurality and a million and a half majority. It would take four disastrous Bryan defeats to equal the one made by that representative of "safe and sane Democracy." I know not how it is in other States, but, sir, I can name the "safe and sane" Democrats in Florida. Show me one on this railroad rate question and I will show you a high railway lawyer, Democratic in politics, hired by the railways in Florida, whose head offices are centered in the city of New York, in Wall street, and composed alike of Democrats and Republicans. Show me the newspaper in Florida of the greatest circulation which condemns this railroad rate legislation and condemns the views of the men here who support it and I will show you a paper in part owned and controlled by Mr. Henry M. Flagler, a Republican Standard Oil millionaire, and whose bonds are in part the property of the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company. This railroad company is controlled, I am informed, by men Democratic in politics. I say that without reflecting upon the personnel of the men who manage that paper. As far as I know, they are high-minded, reputable men. But all of this discloses that wide difference of views, inherent in my party and in the Republican party, between the "conservatives" and the "radicals" upon this railroad rate question.

How long will it be before the Congress, the representatives of the people, will amend the Hepburn railroad rate bill, soon to become a law, and place in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission the power over (1) classification; (2) to prohibit a railroad from increasing an existing rate, without its justness and reasonableness being first passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission; (3) to fix, by competent inquiry, the real value of railway property in the United States, that railway rates may be based upon this real value and not upon a fraudulent value, mere "wind and water." In the State of Florida many of the railroads have had large grants of land to aid in their construction. It is not thought that it would cost more than $15,000 per mile to build and equip the best built railroads in that State. But most of the railroads in Florida are capitalized at, I believe, from $25,000 per mile to $40,000 per mile.

Mr. Chairman, President Roosevelt deals with this very question of overcapitalization in his last message to Congress. Speaking of corporate abuses, he says:

> Of these abuses, perhaps the chief, although by no means the only one, is overcapitalization—generally itself the result of dishonest promotion—because of the myriad evils it brings in its train; for such overcapitalization often means an inflation that invites business panic; it always conceals the true relation of the profit earned to the capital actually invested, and it creates a burden of interest payments which is a fertile cause of improper reduction in or limitation of wages; it damages the small investor, discourages thrift, and encourages gambling and speculation; while perhaps worst of all is the trickiness and dishonesty which it implies—for harm to morals is worse than any possible harm to material interests, and the debauchery of politics and business by great dishonest corporations is far worse than any actual material evil they do the public. Until the National Government obtains, in some manner which the wisdom of the Congress may suggest, proper control over the big corporations engaged in interstate commerce—that is, over the great majority of the big corporations—it will be impossible to deal adequately with these evils.

The President did not in express terms name railroads, but if these reports I have quoted be true, if this information from the expert engineers that I shall place in the RECORD be true, then the President covered railroad overcapitalization as much as any industrial organization; and if this be true, that seven billions of this fourteen billions of capital is false and wrong and fraudulent, and that the American public for twenty-five years and longer has been paying tribute upon a falsehood, then the American Congress should come to the rescue of the President and enforce by adequate legislation his wise suggestion.

Now, sir, I have my party differences with the President. I saw him elected with the greatest reluctance. I wish he could have been defeated by the same majority that overwhelmed my own candidate; but I recognize the great obligations that the shippers of Florida owe to the President for recommending nearly two years ago to the Fifty-eighth Congress that the Interstate Commerce Commission have the power to substitute a just and reasonable rate on interstate freight for and in lieu of an unjust and unreasonable rate, and for his further recommendation that private car lines, with their icing charges, be put under the control of said Commission. It is remarkable to state that neither the Democratic caucus bill nor the Republican caucus bill in the Fifty-eighth Congress made any provision for controlling the outrageous and extortionate icing charges of the private car lines. High interstate freight rates and extortionate icing charges have broken down and driven out of business many growers of truck—early vegetables, melons, cantaloupes—in the State of Florida. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the "Maximum Rate case," decided in 1897, declared that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not have the rate-making power. Since that time the Congresses have known full well the public needs in reform railway rate legislation, but with a conservatism truly wonderful they have failed to give the public any relief against railway rate extortions in their varied forms. It took the writings of William J. Bryan—of the national Democratic plaforms—the bill of WILLIAM R. HEARST, and the message of the President to the Fifty-eighth Congress, thrown on its floors like a bombshell, to wake up the American Congress to a realization of the fact that the American people, regardless of political affiliations, desired immediate legislation against the railway wrongs from which they had so long suffered. How much longer will the people, the shippers, the producers, and consumers in this country have to wait for other and further relief against other and further railway wrongs? [Loud applause.]

[Senate Document No. 168, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Letter from William D. Marks, consulting engineer and statistician, of Philadelphia, Pa., regarding the overcapitalization of the steam-railway corporations of the United States.

DECEMBER 11, 1905.

Hon. WHARTON BARKER,
Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our verbal interviews regarding the overcapitalization of the steam-railway corporations of the United States, and more particularly in reply to your query of the 5th, current, "Let me know what you think a fair capitalization of the railroads or capitalization the public should pay for," I would say that in my experience of late years as a consulting engineer I have been struck by the deplorable and almost universal "watering" of securities in railway corporations practiced by our promoters of these enterprises.

Not only are our railways often wastefully built wholly upon the proceeds of the sale of bonds at figures far below par, but the promoters frequently add to the burden of the earnings of their enterprises by issuing as a bonus (to go with the bonds or appropriated by themselves) an equal or greater amount of stock representing a speculative profit in the future.

So invariably have I found this to be the case that I felt justified, after numerous individual experiences, in saying to you that more than one-half of the railway securities issued represented no real property or investment of cash.

Besides the "water" injected into securities by the original builders of a new railway, other and often larger percentages of it are poured in by financiers who have found their profit in combining a number of individual railways into a "system" by means of a holding and operating corporation.

As a result we frequently find stratum of securities piled upon stratum of securities, until a chart of the securities of a system of some railway systems very closely resembles a geological section.

There can (if my statement is correct) be but one of two results of these manipulations.

Either the public is robbed by overcharging to render these watered securities valuable to their owners, or innocent purchasers of them lose all or a portion of their investments if they have been led to believe that their securities represent real property.

Tersely, either the traveler and shipper is robbed or the purchaser of securities is swindled if he buys believing them to have been honestly issued.

The purchaser of "water" securities is either helping thieves to rob the public or is himself the victim of thieves.

But probably my general experience and feeling in these matters will not serve to convince you or others, and I will ask your careful attention to an analysis of the Massachusetts railroad commissioner's report, 1904:

Returns of year ending June 30, 1903.

Massachusetts railways:	Miles owned.
Total length of line	3,794
Total length of single track	7,601

The cost of construction of these lines, excluding equipment, land and buildings, securities of other companies, cash, and miscellaneous assets, is given as $293,236,332. In round figures, $73,800 per mile of roadbed; $38,600 per mile of single track.

This single track valuation is the important item, for it includes every foot of track, wherever or however used.

Omitting long bridges, tunnels, heavy rock cuts, extraordinary excavations, allowing 10,000 cubic yards excavation per mile, the cash cost of the average standard-gauge railway to the top of the rail head is from many instances about as follows, when prudently constructed:

Preliminary legal papers and rights of way	$700
Civil engineering construction to top of rail	11,000
Arch, stations, shops, and houses	1,500
Total	13,200

Of course we have excepted long bridges (say over 60-foot span) and other unusual features, but throughout Massachusetts and the United States there are very few railways requiring 10,000 cubic yards excavation ($3,500) per mile.

There are notable individual instances of costly and unavoidable engineering expense, but these will be balanced by the average savings from $13,200 allowance per mile for construction.

We see that the average book cost ($38,600) of construction is nearly three times the necessary cost ($13,200) of steam railways to the rail top.

The cost of equipment of the Massachusetts railways is given as $32,957,122. By this is principally meant the rolling stock. For the purpose of this comparison I will place very high figures upon it, though much of it is old and largely depreciated in value.

Locomotives, 2,277, at $10,000 each	$22,770,000
Passenger cars, 3,338, at $5,000 each	16,690,000
Baggage and mail cars, 650, at $3,000 each	1,950,000
Freight cars, 34,825, at $500 each	17,412,500
Gravel and construction cars, 1,865, at $400 each	746,000
Total	59,568,500

Many of these locomotives and cars are leased, but for the purpose of our discussion they should be valued, and so we had better fix their total cost at, say, $76,000,000 instead of $33,000,000, book value given.

There are 7,601 miles of single track owned, and with sufficient accuracy for our purposes we can put the first cost of equipment with rolling stock at $10,000 per mile, a very liberal estimate for the Massachusetts railways, which serve a denser population than exists in any other portion of the United States, and which, being a manufacturing community, must use its railways largely.

We have omitted occasional extraordinary expenditures, say, for the tunnels and long bridges over rivers and also for rock cuts and deep excavations.

We are perfectly safe, however, in allowing an average of $2,000 per mile of track, or $15,202,000 to cover the cash cost of these extras.

Recapitulating for the average honest cash cost of Massachusetts railways we have for each mile of single track owned:

Preliminary legal papers and right of way	$700
Civil engineering and construction to top of rail	11,000
Minor stations, machine shops, and houses	1,500
Equipment of locomotives and cars	10,000
Extraordinary expenditures	2,000
Estimated cost of construction and equipment per mile	25,200

Massachusetts has been selected because its railroad commissioners have largely reduced the usual amount of corporate dishonesty by their most careful examinations and enforced publicity of corporate accounts.

Its dense population requires a larger equipment than the average of the rest of the United States. Its costs of construction are increased, by reason of its rocky soil and hilly topography, far above the average of many other sections.

I have increased the stated book value of equipment from $33,000,000 to $76,000,000; I have added $15,000,000 to well-known standard average costs of construction; I have allowed $11,400,000 for architectural work, and as a result I have obtained an average cash cost per mile of $25,200, which I have no doubt substantially exceeds the true cost of railways.

In education, frugality, industry, and honesty Massachusetts's population stands in the first rank of these United States, and yet we have the following capitalization of the Massachusetts railways:

Funded debt	$133,435,355
Mortgages, etc	25,007,318
Capital stock	235,834,466
Total capitalization	394,277,139

Dividing this by 7,601 miles of single track we obtain about $52,000 capitalization per mile—51½ per cent of water, probably more.

Referring to gross assets of companies given on page 9 of Massachusetts railroad commission's report, June 30, 1903, we find as book accounts, but probably not the practical truth:

Construction	$293,236,332
Equipment	32,957,122
Land and buildings	1,497,218
Cash	40,880,067
Total	368,570,739
Stocks, bonds, and other property	64,210,110
Gross assets	432,780,849

The item of $64,000,000 probably represents "strategic purchases," having no proper relation to expenditures required to operate the roads for the convenience of the public and the profit of the stockholders.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, June 30, 1903, reports total miles of single track 283,821.52 (this is not the length of roadbed, which is less; it is the total length of all the tracks, wherever placed). Outside of Massachusetts, with a few exceptions, in the Eastern and Middle States the equipment rarely costs as much as $5,000 per mile, and we are liberal in putting the cash cost of construction and equipment of all at an average of $20,000 per mile, or $5,676,420,000. The total railway capital June 30, 1903, was (Interstate Commerce Commission report) $12,599,990,258, or about $7,000,000,000 watered securities and $5,600,000,000 actual value.

Experienced engineers (I mean those who have been through the mill) will tell you the same as I do as to actual costs of constructions and equipment, if not (as in most cases) prevented by personal fear of consequences from disclosing the truth.

You may, and probably will, have many instances of extraordinary cost of construction brought to prove to you the higher cost of our railways. Many of these instances are both unwise and unnecessary expenditures.

Do not forget that for every such case there are hundreds of miles of railway which honestly have not cost $17,500 per mile to construct and equip; on the contrary, very much less.

The fairest index of the proper cost of a railway is not its length of roadbed, but its length of single track.

Twenty thousand dollars per mile is an overestimate of the average cost of most railways crossing the vast prairies of the West.

You will note that I have not brought forward the many individual instances which have come to my notice upon which I based my former statements to you, but have delayed long enough to enable me to verify them, generally by a consideration of all the railways of Massachusetts.

For thirty-four years, beginning on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Road, as a civil engineer, in the days of the crimes of Fisk and Gould, of the Erie, I have watched the growth of this criminal method called "watering" securities, and to-day we find that their success has led to the perpetration by their imitators of a colossal fraud reaching $7,000,000,000 upon the citizens of this United States.

I wish you godspeed in trying to put a stop to it. If you succeed you will earn the gratitude of every honest man.

I return to you the bill, which could be much improved, and I also hand you Engineering News, November 2, 1905, containing a brief article of mine on "Railway rates for an electric railway," and the following papers: "What are the facts?" by Slason Thompson; "Facts about railroad rates," by H. T. Newcomb; "Solution transportation problem," by P. S. Grosscup; "Mass. R. R. I. Comm. Rept., June 30, 1903."

After you have read my article in the Engineering News I wish you would refer to Census Bulletins Nos. 3 and 21 just to see how carefully they have avoided giving the required data enabling the fixing of the cost of construction, equipment, and operation of the railways they pretend to deal with.

To the engineer's lot it falls to deal with the concrete and tangible, and when he seeks help from these expensive publications by our Government he finds that because no one compiling the data in them appears to have power to demand replies, or practical experience and grasp, all our Government statisticians have fallen victims to the conspiracy of secrecy among railway promoters and operators, who above all things fear honest publicity for their deeds.

Very truly, yours,

WM. D. MARKS.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. LA FOLLETTE to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, viz: After line 2, page 20, insert a new section, to be known as section 6a, to read as follows:

SEC. 6a. That section 19 of said act be amended by adding thereto a new section, to be known as section 19a, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 19a. That the Commission shall investigate and ascertain the fair value of the property of every railroad engaged in interstate commerce, as defined in this act, and used by it for the convenience of the public. For the purpose of such investigation the Commission is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary. Such investigation shall be commenced as soon as may be after July 1, 1906, and shall be prosecuted with diligence and thoroughness and the results thereof and of additions and corrections thereto reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session. Such valuation shall show the value of the property of every railroad as a whole, and the value of its property in each of the several States or Territories or the District of Columbia. Every such railroad shall furnish to the Commission, from time to time, and as the Commission may require, maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, and other documents, records, and papers, or copies of any or all of the same, in aid of such investigation and determination of the value of the property of said railroad, and every such railroad is required to cooperate with the Commission in the work of the valuation of its property in such further particulars and to such extent as the Commission may direct.

"The Commission shall thereafter, in like manner, keep itself informed of all extensions and improvements or other changes in the conditions of the property of the said railroads, and ascertain the fair value thereof, and from time to time, as may be required for the regulation of railways, under the provisions of this act, revise and correct its valuation of railway property. To enable the Commission to make such changes and corrections in its valuation, every railroad engaged in interstate commerce, as defined in this act, is required to report currently to the Commission, and as the Commission may require, all improvements and changes in its property, and to file with the Commission copies of all contracts for such improvements at the time the same are executed.

"Whenever the Commission shall have completed the valuation of the property of any railroad, and before said valuation shall be recorded as finally determined by said Commission, the Commission shall give notice by registered letter to the company or companies owning or operating said railroad, stating the valuation placed upon the several lines of road and classes of property of the said company used by it for the convenience of the public, and shall allow the company or companies twenty days in which to file a protest of the same with the Commission. If no protest is filed within twenty days, such valuation shall be made a matter of record by the Commission.

"If notice of contest is filed by any railroad the Commission shall fix a time for hearing the same, and shall proceed as promptly as may be to hear and consider any matter relative and material thereto presented by such railroad in support of its protest so filed as aforesaid. If after hearing any contest of such valuation under the provisions of this act, the Commission is of the opinion that its valuation is incorrect, it shall correct the same and determine the fair valuation of such property, and shall make such determination a matter of record in the office of the Commission. All such valuations by the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the fair value of the railroad property in all proceedings under this act."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan thirty minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in these days of rate making and State making, I would like to invite your candid and careful consideration to the subject of postal telegraph and to the arbitrary and exorbitant telegraph rates that we are paying in this country.

I maintain that it is the duty of the Government, under the Constitution, to establish a postal telegraph system.

The Constitution has placed the Post-Office in the hands of the Government and conferred upon it exclusive operations. (See Article I, section 8 of the Constitution, which empowers Congress to declare war, coin money, regulate commerce, etc., and this same provision contains the words "to establish post-offices and post-roads.")

As all these powers are conferred by the same clause of the Constitution, it must be admitted that the Government has exclusive power as to the post-offices the same as to the other provisions.

In 1836 Hon. John C. Calhoun, in a report made by him as chairman of a committee in the United States Senate, said:

"It must be borne in mind that the power of Congress over the post-office and the mails is an exclusive power."

This language has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Gardner G. Hubbard, than whom there was no higher authority on the subject of telegraph and its relation to the Government, used these words, "that Congress had no more right to delegate the power of transmitting intelligence than the power to coin money or declare war."

The Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of 1874, which numbered among its members such men as Hannibal Hamlin and Alexander Ramsey, said, in its report on the telegraph, "The Constitution devolves upon Congress the duty of transmitting all correspondence, including that by telegraph as well as that by mail;" and for a further careful and convincing statement on this point I refer you to the report of the House Committee on Ways and Means of 1845. The Government had already built the first telegraph line, and the question of extending the service under Government ownership was before the committee.

On this principle the first telegraph line was built between Washington and Baltimore by a Congressional appropriation of $30,000, and the telegraph belonged to the Government from 1844 to 1847, when, under mistaken notions of economy, it was turned over to private ownership. Of the public men who earnestly protested against this course were Henry Clay, the great Whig leader, and Cave Johnson, the Democratic Postmaster-General.

If the words in the report referred to and the prophecies of Professor Morse and the appeals of such men as Clay and others had been heeded, the people of this country would be enjoying the telegraph even to a greater degree than the people of the Old World and millions would have been saved instead of going into the coffers of an odious monopoly.

Indeed, the Supreme Court of the United States (Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. West, etc., Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. Reports, p. 9) has held that the telegraph came within the grant of power to establish the post-office. The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Waite:

"The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stagecoach; from the sailing vessel to the steamboat; from the coach and steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth."

And Justice H. B. Brown, of the United States Supreme Court, has said:

"If the Government may be safely intrusted with the transmission of our letters and papers, I see no reason why it may not also be intrusted with the transmission of our telegrams, as is almost universally the case in Europe."

We provide for carrying the mails by the swiftest known methods—steam, electric railways, and pneumatic tubes. Why deny the right to use the telegraph? We carry the mails at a loss. Why not use the telegraph, not only as a convenience and blessing to all our people, but in order to help wipe out the annual postal deficit?

Who, in this intelligent and progressive age, doubts that the telegraph is an essential part of an efficient postal service?

The postal telegraph is in use in most of the principal nations of the world. Honduras, Cyprus, Bolivia, Hawaii, Cuba, and the United States are among the number that do not use this system.

We should have a first-class postal telegraph in the United States in connection with our splendid postal facilities, and the rates can be reduced at least one-half, leaving a sufficient amount to dispose of the deficit, and have money left to extend the rural service to practically every home and pay the city and rural carriers a compensation fitting their services and expenses. In fact the surplus could be used in many ways to the great advantage of the general public.
